Joe Coover gets Eagle Award

Joe Coover got his Eagle Award last week on January 11th, at a court of honor ceremony of Troop 39, Mount Joy. The award was presented by Dale Boyer of Marietta.

Joe, 18 years old, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph F. Coover, 134 N. High St., Mount Joy. He is a senior at DHS, where he is president of the school band.

To get his Eagle Award, Joe worked to restore the parks in Mount Joy. Earlier he won the "God and Country" award in 1976 from St. Mark's U.M. Church.

Joe has been a scout for ten years, and is a scout instructor in lifesaving and swimming. He's received seven swimming medals, and is a member of the Order of the Arrow.

The Connection

PP&L and other utilities in the PA-NJ-MD connection weathered last Tuesday's severe weather all right. The "connection" is a massive grid of interconnections whereby power companies buy electricity from each other and share loads during shortages.

PP&L managed to send current to stricken power plants in the south and west without causing any local blackouts or brownouts.

The peak load of Tuesday a week ago was 4,431,000, which compares to the all-time high which was set in January, 1977.

That load measured in at 4,425,000 nominal kilowatts. The wattage at that time was actually higher, even though the reading was lower — it was recorded during a voltage reduction, or "brownout." The actual amount of current was higher.

The coal strike has meant that power companies must dig into old stockpiles, which were wet and are now frozen.

PP&L now has a 57 day supply of coal. If they run out, oil must be burned instead, which will cause a leap in fuel bills. They don't expect this, however.

Women needed to conserve energy

The state Women Commission is going to train people whose only skill is homemaking in energy conservation. After 24 weeks of training, the women will, the Commission hopes, demonstrate that homemakers can become eligible for a wide variety of energy related jobs, such as consumer services, insulation work, and "household maintenance."

Book review:
Second hand
wood

Mike and Nancy Bubel, who used to live in Mount Joy RD1 on Colebrook Road (they now live in York County) have written and gotten published a book called Working Wood, a Guide for the Country Carpenter.

The book, published by Rodale Press, is about "woodbutchery" — the making of sturdy, practical farm equipment and structures with second-hand wood. It is illustrated with drawings and photos.

Starting with a chapter on where to find second hand wood, it goes on the tools and fundamentals of rough carpentry, and then into various projects: a garage, hay rake, sheep shelter, barn, etc. At the end is a list of other useful books.

If this book had come out a few years ago, it probably would have been listed in the Whole Earth Catalogue. The prose is folksy, simple, and easy to understand, the drawings in the style frequently found in counterculture how-to-do-it books. For a woodworker, its fun to browse through, even if one already knows the tricks of nail-pulling and moving heavy objects without expensive professional equipment.

The book costs $3.95 and runs 192 pages in paperback.
