Lois knows every kid

Lois Shellenberger, of 22 West Walnut Street, Marietta, retired last week after 12 years as a school crossing guard in Marietta. She will be missed by hundreds of kids, most of whom she knows by name.

Lois's son was in 3rd grade when she became a crossing guard for the old Marietta elementary school (now the Jaycees building). Now her son is two years out of high school.

How many kids' names has she learned over the years? She couldn't even estimate, but said she knew the names of easily 500 who are still in Riverview. "I know pretty near every boy or girl in Marietta," she says.

Remembering was easier before the town's population grew a few years ago. "People are moving in and out, in and out, all the time now," she told us.

Lois didn't mind the weather, she says, except for getting cold feet. She solved that problem last year by buying snowmobile boots. "I'm from the mountains anyway," she jokes.

Lois never had a child injured in a traffic accident in all the 12 years, although she admits there were a few close calls. "The drivers are generally pretty good," she says.

Lois intends to look for a full-time job now.

The oldest vets

Of the 374 living veterans of the Spanish-American War, 23 live in Pennsylvania. California leads the pack with 72 veterans.

The oldest SAW vet is Norman Hobgood of Arkadelphia, Arkansas, who turned 107 on Jan. 4th.

The only living Medal of Honor winner is 100 year old William Seach, a patient at the Brockton, Mass., VA hospital.

Six states have no SAW vets: Alaska, Hawaii, Vermont, Idaho, Maryland, and South Dakota.

Appearing April 2 under the Sun.
