Marietta Restorationists meet

As part of their regular meeting, the Marietta Restoration Associates will have the opportunity to see a unique combination of restoration and apartment living. The Riverhills Associates, comprised of David White, Harold Kulman, Tom Smithgall, and Donald White, will show the group how they gave their fire damaged town house, circa 1840, a new lease on life while preserving the original exterior facade.

The group will see the step-by-step changes which have been recorded on slides after which they will meet at 107 W. Market Street, the site of the apartments, for a guided tour.

Members and others interested are encouraged to be present at the Marietta Community House, 264 W. Market, on Thursday, April 20th, at 7:30 PM.

...flood-plain law

that a house must be water-tight: drains would have to be fitted with one-way valves to prevent backup of flood waters into the house, and all walls below the hundred year flood line would have to be water-proof. This can be done, it seems, but is most likely rather expensive.

As to Marietta's expected Historic District status, it guarantees that houses in the district could not be forced to be torn down, even if Marietta Borough passed such an ordinance. As for retroactive "floodproofing," it would probably apply to new structures (as we understand it at this point in our investigation), but not to any standing structure.

The Historic District will include all of Front Street and much of Market Street. Houses lining East Market are not in the District.

The Times hopes to keep its readers informed as this matter is investigated.
