Aspirin still the best

Although millions of dollars have been spent on research on arthritis, the best medication for this disease is still aspirin, according to Dr. John Branas, house physician at Heatherbank in Columbia.

Dr. Branas says that there are new drugs which don't have some of the side effects of aspirin, but they are very expensive. If an arthritis sufferer can take aspirin safely, this common drug is adequate.

A message about your telephone service.

Long distance.

It keeps your local phone service affordable.

We thought you'd like to know some of the factors that affect your monthly telephone bill. Particularly the ones that help keep the price of your local service below the cost of supplying it.

The fact is, it costs telephone companies more to provide local service than they actually charge.

The difference between the cost of providing local service and what you pay for it is made up by long distance revenues.

Nationally, out of every two dollars of long distance revenue, about 55 cents helps to pay the cost of local telephone service.

Result: More affordable phone service for you and your family. And more families with phones.

Why do we underprice home telephone service?

In America, telephone service is based on the idea that every family should have reliable telephone service at a reasonable cost. America's telephone companies, with government approval, have pretty well made that concept a reality. Today there are very few homes without a telephone.

We think using long distance revenues to help keep charges for local telephone service down so virtually every family can afford it is more than just a good idea. It's a national policy which has served our customers and the country well for years.
