

July 4th in Marietta

Lancaster County had to wait a long time for the Marietta Jaycee's annual fourth of July bang, but the show was worth waiting for.

It rained on the third, then it rained on the fourth, then it rained on the "rain date" last Saturday.

In a lesser town, this sort of attack from the clouds might have postponed the show indefinitely, but it takes more than a few inches of water to frighten the people of Marietta. The Jaycees fired a few warning shots at the sky, and prepared hold their ground.

When the clouds realized that the biggest barrage of fireworks in the southern half of the state was aimed right at their puffy faces, they retreated in a panic.

The giant crowd, unfazed by the mud in Memorial Park, was treated to a bombardment which lasted a full earth-shaking hour. There were several ground displays, including a blazing American flag.
