FIFTEEN CENTS

Judy, J. Richard, and Anna Ruth Nissley in front of the winery building, built by J. Richard after he retired from the construction business. The whole family works at winemaking; Judy is in charge of public relations.

Nissley Vineyards opened last week

Three and a half years ago J. Richard Nissley had just sold his successful construction business and retired—or so he thought.

"My son John had just come home after serving in Vietnam and then barnstorming around the country," he explains. "He asked me if I had any work for him, and I didn't. So we started the winery."

John Nissley is now the vineyard master of Nissley Vineyards, and J. Richard Nissley has a new career going.

Nissley Vineyard, located near Bainbridge, has now opened its doors to the public. It is the 3rd commercial winery in the county.

The entire family got involved during the three and a half years of preparation. Besides son John, daughter Judy is also working as the public relations person. Mother Anna Ruth serves wine to the guests and runs the store. And daughters Joyce and Mary Lee, who live in Boston and Washington DC respectively, come home every year to help with the grape harvest.

J. Richard Nissley had been an amateur winemaker for years, and at first he made the wine himself; but, as he told a recent group of visitors, that changed after he was visited by Dr. Beelman of Penn State, who is the winemaking professor at the university.

Dr. Beelman sampled some of Mr. Nissley's wine

Marietta included in register of historic places

Marietta has been entered in the National Register of Historic Places.

The historic district in Marietta includes 136 structures in a 158-acre area, which has been characterized as a well preserved mid-19th Century industrial town.

Residents of the area are protected from federal or state projects which would alter the area, and are eligible for tax cuts and grants to encourage preservation of historic structures within the district.

Sales days in Mount Joy

Mount Joy merchants are holding Sidewalk Sales Days on August 10 through 12—Thursday, Friday, and Saturday—and they'll be giving away tickets to the Phillies-Giants game too.

Great bargains will be also available inside the stores, as well as on the sidewalks.

Free parking will make it easy to shop. Meters will be bagged.

Each participating merchant will give away two tickets to the Phillies-Giants game on August 19th, including transportation to and from the game.

Don't miss this giant sale sponsored by the Mount Joy Merchants' Association on August 10, 11, and 12.

Susquehanna Times error last week

The Susquehanna Times made an error in its story of last week's paper about the Donegal School Board meeting.

It was incorrectly reported that the board had voted not to purchase anymore band front uniforms. This is not the case.

The board actually voted to buy two new uniforms for the majorettes, on condition that the size of the band front not be increased. No new uniforms will be purchased for color guard.

Marietta Restorationists

The Marietta Restoration Associates met in the home of president Ken Ross recently to reaffirm their commitment to the study and preservation of historic places in Marietta.

The goals of the restorationists—community awareness, investigating the history of local structures, rehabilitation of rundown housing, and to assist homeowners in restoring their historic properties—were officially discussed and set down.

It was announced that grants of funds from the Lancaster County Redevelopment Authority will be released in the near future for the restoration of the Union Meeting House on Waterford Avenue. John deVitry has been awarded the architect's contract at a fee of $12,500.

The $85,000 grant will return the structure to its original condition.

The Marietta Restoration Associates will transfer title of the Sultzbach House on August 31. Purchasers are Harold "Brosie" Kulman, of Marietta, and Marvin E.

Miller, Jr., a state representative from Lancaster.

The next meeting of Restoration Associates will be on September 15, at 8:00 PM, in the Marietta Community House. The public is invited.
