Autumn

by Chester Wittell

Autumn, the tidy housewife, has a flare
For orderly arrangement. June and May
Are teen-age now; she puts their toys away.
July's old sweat-shirt on the hanger there
She cleans and closets with maternal care.
The still-hot bowl of August's pipe of clay
She racks and wipes the ashes from the tray,
And drops the shades to blind the sunlight's glare.
Too long the hue of green has irked her eye;
It shall be changed. She heaves a wind-borne sigh;
Shortens day's skirt and dyes the balding trees
In brown, and getting down on hands and knees,
And wrapping up September's equinox,
Puts summer's weather into winter's box.

Time to Add More

Attic insulation can settle down over the years. It's not as thick, or effective, as it used to be.

It's time to add more. And chances are, the older your home, the more you'll need.

Years ago, 2 or 3 inches of attic insulation was par for the course. But let's face it...the days of cheap energy are over. In fact, heating costs have risen to the point that now even 6 inches is not considered good.

Today, we recommend attic insulation 8 to 12 inches thick...or the equivalent of R-30. The "R" stands for thermal Resistance. And, the higher the R-number, the better the insulating value.

Of all the places to add insulation in your home, the attic is most important. It's also the easiest, most economical place to start.

So, come up to the new R-30 standard soon. You can cut heating costs in winter...cooling costs in summer. Best of all, with year after year savings like this, your extra insulation can pay for itself.
