National 4-H Week

From inner-city Newark to the sparse reaches of Montana, nearly 5.5 million young people are observing National 4-H Week Oct. 1-7. Regardless of address, these girls and boys benefit from a unique educational program that places primary emphasis on the development of the individual.

4-H offers young people a variety of "learn-by-doing" opportunities to grow into self-directed, productive and contributing members of society. Projects and activities range from pre-driver training to economic education, from community service to international exchanges, all geared to the specific interests, abilities and age levels of participants.

As the nation's largest youth-serving program, 4-H appeals to youngsters no matter where they live. During National 4-H Week we salute these 4-H'ers, their involved parents and volunteer leaders, Cooperative Extension Service personnel and representatives of American business, who work together to make possible the broad outreach and effectiveness of contemporary 4-H.
