BOROUGH OF MOUNT JOY ZONING HEARING BOARD

The largest investment most people make during their lifetime is their house. Many people purchase new houses requiring very little additional expense above the purchase price; however, in the Marietta, Mount Joy, Columbia are many homes are pre-twentieth century vintage and may require comfortable and practical for today's living. The decisions which an old house owner makes before starting any work are even more important than the actual work.

In order to protect one's investment and protect that "old house charm", care should be taken to keep architectural details intact. Unnecessary removal of window and door trim, porch and cornice details, alteration of doors and windows not only destroy the architectural appearance of a building but also diminish the long term market value of the house.

Fortunately, architectural details can nearly always be retained during renovation work if a little care and planning goes into the job. One of the best rules to remember to protect your investment is, don't do anything that can't be undone. Intricate architectural details represent examples of fine craftsmanship which today's economics usually prohibit.

Removal of them will mean you or your descendants will have a significant expense to replace them or suffer a loss in the resale value of your house.

Old houses were built to last many generations and will, if given a little care; however, their value and charm can be lost forever if hasty decisions are made during renovation.
