Knorr said that the two had "cleaned up their act" in response to the letters sent out by the Borough, and were acting in good faith.

The Borough solicitor, Knorr said, had claimed that the dealers' cars were in violation because they could not legally be driven off the lots. But state law allows such a car to be driven with "dealer plates" and no current inspection.

At the meeting, the Council seemed to agree that either Knorr's ruling must be appealed, or the law re-written. They discussed the matter.

James Heisey, representing the town's car dealers, said that the ordinance should be re-written. As it stands, he said, it makes criminals out of every car dealer in Mount Joy as well as many other people, such as bankers, who have cars on their properties which are legally "abandoned." Under the ordinance (#349) any car with an expired inspection sticker is "abandoned," he pointed out.

Heisey said that the law is poorly written, as it says that a car is abandoned if not inspected "and/or" not registered, which is another way of saying "or." It should say "and," Heisey noted.

Council decided to appeal Knorr's decision. They will petition the Court of Common Pleas of the county, which will decide whether or not to accept the case.

Fire insurance

The cost of insurance for the fire companies was discussed. Council felt that the surrounding townships, whose residents are protected by the Friendship and Florin companies, should pay more of the costs than they do. The insurance is based on the total number of people served by the firemen, which is nearly double the population of Mount Joy Borough.

Auditors' report

The borough auditors presented their report. They recommended faster tax collection to let the town get more interest on the money. They also noted that parking meter income has been declining; no official recommendation was made, but one of the auditors mentioned the idea of getting rid of them if the upkeep costs go over the income.

Borough record-keeping has improved over the last two years, they said.

Public Hour

A man from Martin Avenue presented a petition requesting that Council tell the cable TV company to install cable on a stretch of the street that doesn't have it. All but one resident of the area (15 people) signed it.

Council promised to talk to the cable company about it.

Mr. Mateer, the Birchland Avenue resident, said that a good possible solution to that street's runoff problem had been found. Councilman Ammon Smith outlined the plan—a shallow ditch or swale along the north side of the avenue, along the field from which the runoff water comes. Mateer felt that most of the residents would favor the plan.

Ammon Smith noted that if the borough redirected the water, it might be legally responsible for the water afterward.

The idea will be studied further.

A resident of West Donegal Street asked that Council either abandon or pave an alley that runs past his house (between West Donegal Street and Donegal Springs Road). Former councilman Sim Horton, who lives nearby, told council that he has not seen a car use the alley as a through-way in twenty years.

Council told the man that he should bring a petition for the borough to abandon the alley, and then Council could act on his request.

A sewer line might run under the alley; if one does, the borough may not want to abandon it.

Another man, who lives on West Donegal Street, asked if it was true that some developers were going to build there. Acting secretary Albert Kleiner told him that some fellows had been in to the office to ask questions, but there were no definite plans yet.

Bob Behling, of the Borough Planning Commission, who was in the audience, told him that his group would know about it sooner than the council.

Garbage

Albert Kleiner discussed the garbage situation, saying that letters to most offenders have resulted in quick cleanups, but some people with piles of garbage had not done anything. Chief Kline mentioned a pizza parlor that has, he said, three times as much garbage as it has storage for. Garbage is all over the nearby area as a result, he said.

Council decided not to act on this because it was not "proper" for them to do so. They will contact another agency about it.

Albert Kleiner told about a new trash collection system that does away with plastic garbage bags, which are often torn apart by animals. This system uses a sort of plastic wheelbarrow in place of bags or cans, which are hard to the collection men to dump and thus increase garbage collection costs.

Councilman Omar Groff said that the public needs to be educated on the proper ways of storing trash, and he proposed that charges be laid on the basis of the amount of trash produced by a customer.

Donsco request

A Mr. Williams, plant engineer for Donsco, asked Council to re-zone Donsco's property from campus industrial to general industrial so that they could rebuild their plant closer to Jacob Street. (The setbacks are 20 feet in general, 60 feet in campus commercial zones.)

He also asked that the town abandon its rights to an alley through Donsco's property. This was done, since the alley is only shown on certain old maps, and there is no record of it anywhere—it does not really exist.

The rezoning question must go to the zoning hearing board before it formally comes before Council. Donsco may decide that the process is too time-consuming (it would take months to get it passed) and not apply.

Mr. Fitzkee appeared to reflect the sentiments of the rest of council when he explained that council might be reluctant to change the zoning to general industrial. He mentioned another plant whose stamping machines break plaster in homes three blocks away, but who are outside the control of Council because of their general industrial zoning.

Council received reports on the storm sewer projects and the bridges, and heard an announcement about street sweeping schedules.
