WILD GEESE

Above the azure turrets of the sky,
 Where restive winds their banners fold in peace,
 Up from the warm and balmy southland fly
 The pointed arrows of the wilding geese.

Impelled by need and winter's timely end,
 And by a faultless instinct surely led,
 They know the straight and airy paths that tend
 To fertile realms where hunger may be fed.

What thrill elate, what joy to man unknown
 These errant, yet instinctive rovers know;
 Gliding unbanned awing from zone to zone,
 While fugitive horizons fade and grow!

What bliss seraphic unbeknown to us,
 Like babes to earth's maternal skirts who cling,
 Learning to lisp from nature's syllabus
 The rudiments that base the art of spring!
