FIFTEEN CENTS

Nuclear poll Many would consider leaving if TMI re-opened; public confidence in press, nuke industry, government declined

One out of every four Marietta residents left town to avoid the radiation hazard during the crisis at Three Mile Island. In Middletown, one half of all residents evacuated.

These figures are gleaned from a poll conducted by the Elizabethtown College Social Research Center on April 2 through 8. The poll, funded by the Lancaster Intelligencer Journal, was conducted by telephone. Residents of E-town, Middletown, and Marietta were interviewed.

Since the poll was conducted over the course of several days, changes in the attitudes of local people can be seen.

Attitudes toward the news media changed drastically. On Mon., April 2, 58 per cent approved of the way TV and radio were reporting the crisis. By April 8, only 45 per cent still approved.

Answers to the question, "Do you think the public has been told the truth about this situation?" varied a lot. On April 2, 47 per cent thought they were being lied to. By April 8, 64 per cent of the people thought they were hearing lies.

On April 2, only 23 per cent of respondents wanted TMI shut down forever. By April 8, the number had grown to 37 per cent.

If TMI does re-open, 22 per cent of Middletown may abandon the town. Only 16 per cent of Mariettans, and 9 per cent of E-town residents, will consider leaving if the plant re-opens.

Marietta residents, perhaps because they live farthest from the plant, were slightly less likely than residents of other towns to consider the incident "very serious."

And 61 per cent of Mariettans think TMI should be allowed to operate again in the future, as opposed to only 56 per cent of Middletown residents.

Marietta residents, however, are the most emphatic supporters of tighter safety standards for nuclear plants; 88 per cent think the nation needs tougher safety standards for N-plants. Surprisingly, only 76 per cent of Middletown folk want stricter safety standards.

The poll revealed that 62% of respondents support "the use of nuclear power as a source of energy for our nation." This is a surprising contrast with various national polls which show 46 to 52 per cent of the nation supporting nuclear power. Support for nuclear power increases with education, and males are more supportive (72%) than females (54%).

Forty-one % of the population within a ten-mile radius of the plant evacuated. Fifty-eight per cent of those aged 25-34 left, possibly because of the large number of parents of young children in that age group. Only 27% of single people evacuated.

A third of local people want the plant shut permanently (although 44% of women want it shut down forever).

Half the people think they were lied to about the situation, but 69 % approved of the way the government handled the situation.

A clear majority (90%) think nuclear plants need stricter safety standards, but only 10 per cent want all plants shut down immediately.
