Rock'n'Roll

"people believe that anyone with a mouth can sing. They don't realize how much training must go into real singing, just as in learning to play any instrument.

Jane Mansfield wanted Elvis Presley to sing a song in one of her movies. Presley's agent said the cost would be $50 thousand. Jane thought a visit to Presley might induce him to lower his price, but Presley's agent still wanted $50 thousand.

"Something isn't right."

With much to think about, we left Dr. Wittell.

We passed a tavern in which the juke box was blaring: a thumpety, thump.

Yes, we thought, echoing Dr. Wittell, "Something isn't right."

THE OLD COVERED BRIDGE

by Chester Wittell

Above the mirror of the winding creek,
Like some old chapel built by votive hands
In witness of a faith or creed antique,
Outmoded, lonely and aloof, it stands.
Its days are numbered. Yet another year
And cranes with girded steel shall span the stream,
And all the quiet charm that once lived here
Shall vanish like the passing of a dream

Within its spacious cloister, cool and dark,
The eye won respite from the noontide glare,
And the wide sweep of the great beam's massive arc
Told of the latent strength that slumbered there.
Its wooden floor, immune to ice and snow,
Was redolent of horse scent, mild and sweet,
And chinked to let the walker peep below
And see the creek that flowed beneath his feet.

How oft beneath its cover from the rain
We found asylum with unspoken thanks,
Or through the silence heard the rumbling wain
Wheel muted thunder on the sturdy planks!
How friendly was its greeting! "Enter ye,"
It seemed to say, "and fear not for thy load."
Its entrance, knowing neither lock nor key,
Was always open to receive the road.

What if its days be numbered or at an end?
Its frame emburdened by the tale of years?
Since all things to finality must tend,
In vain the sorrow of regret and tears;
For as the little stream beneath its floor
Shall live forever in the mighty sea,
So shall it live forevermore
Preserved upon the scroll of memory.
