Fortney & Weller open exotic shop in Marietta; to sell earthly delights coffees, teas, spices, antiques, etc.

Kenneth Fortney and Richard Weller, 17 W. Market St., Marietta, will open a shop at the same address on Wednesday, Oct. 3.

Fortney's area will be known as "Earthly Delights" and will feature special blends of coffee, teas and 50 spices and herbs. Weller will sell antiques, country furniture and quilts.

The shop will stock specialty coffees (drink it there or have some ground to order), 50 varieties of exotic teas (including the popular "Celestial Seasonings" brand), 50 types of herbs and spices, and coffee and tea accessories will be on sale. Mineral water and, biscuits, and crackers will also be available to patrons.

"I hope the business will grow," said Mr. Fortney, "although I'm starting in a small way. Marietta is a Victorian town, a self-sufficient town, where everyone shops locally. That's the way it should be."

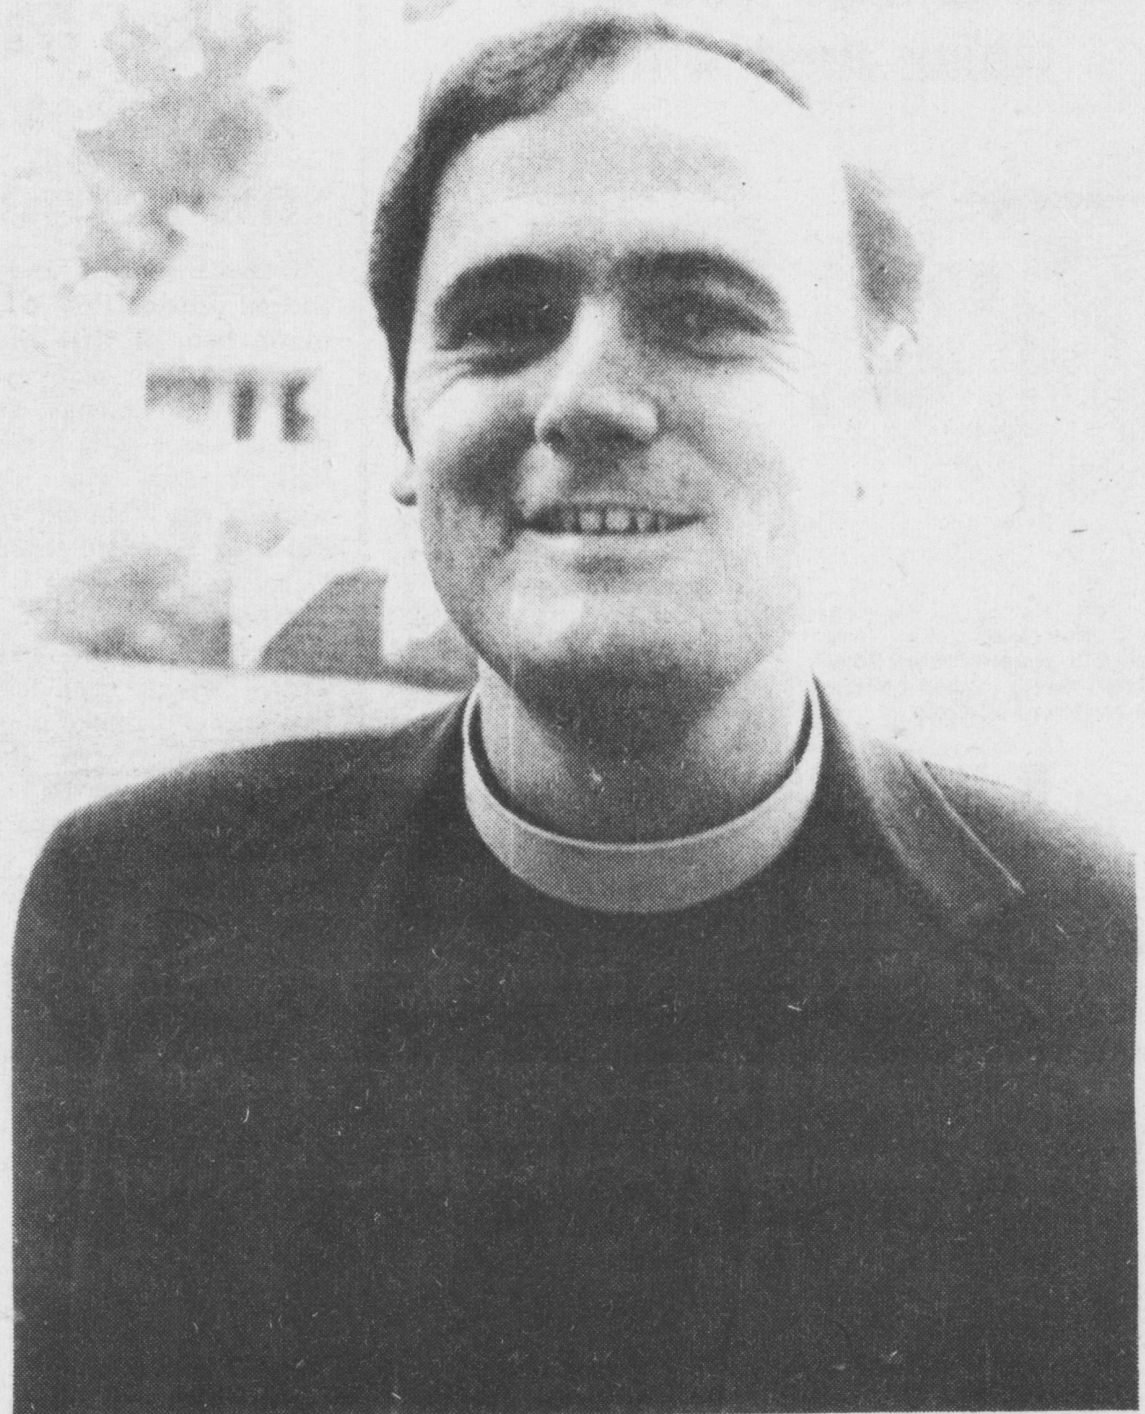

Ken Fortney has lived here for several years, and is well-known for his stencil work in this area. He is currently active in producing antique floor covering, having discovered a method of preventing the old-fashioned linoleum from cracking when rolled up.

His floor material is made from canvas which he soaks in linseed oil, then paints.

Mr. Fortney is a native of York County, and a graduate of the Philadelphia University of Fine Arts. He taught art for eight years at the Marcus Hook Elementary school. He works now as a bartender at the Railroad House.

Mr. Weller will stock antiques, collectibles, furniture, and quilts in the shop. He previously had a shop at the Black Angus in Akron.

Mr. Weller, who is from southern Lancaster County, is a graduate of Washington University with degrees in anthropology and sociology. He was a juvenile parole officer in Virginia for 15 years, and was later employed as a court services director.

Rev. Joseph Seville

Rev. Jos. Seville is the new rector at St. Luke's Episcopal in Mt. Joy active in diocese and ecumenicism

Last Tuesday, the Rev. Joseph Seville moved into the rectory of St. Luke's Episcopal Church in Mount Joy, a beautiful house, he thinks.

Rev. Seville grew up in Pittsburgh, but his parents moved to Camp Hill, and he graduated from Cedar Cliff High School.

He obtained his B.A. in political science from Temple University in 1970, and then a Master of Divinity from Yale in 1973.

In 1977 he was awarded a master's degree in public administration from Penn State. His thesis was about a systems model for the Diocese of the Episcopal Church in Central Pennsylvania.

For five and a half years he was rector at St. John's Church in Bellefonte, Pa. Before that he was a Diocesan Intern at St. Luke's in Altoona, getting on-the-job training.

He is married to the former Linda Turnbaugh, and they have a daughter, Anne.

While in Bellefonte, Rev. Seville was president of the local Council of Churches, visiting chaplain for local hospitals, and Episcopal Chaplain at Rockview State Prison, a maximum security prison.

Although there have been no executions in the electric chair for some years in Pennsylvania, Rev. Seville's parishioners told him how the lights used to dim at midnight when the electric chair was turned on.

Rev. Seville has been active in diocesan affairs. He is a member of the Youth Commission, the Department of Christian Social Relations, the Finance Committee of the diocese, and was elected to the Diocesan Council.
