Suppertime is family time at the Halbleibs. Adam who is an eloquent talker, likes to tell stories about ghosts and witches. Allison talks about school.

Then it's homework time, or, if the homework is done, time to work on Halloween costumes or other family projects.

"We just like to be around each other as much as possible," says Sallie.

The Halbleibs, while doing many things together, also encourage their children, especially older Alison, to do things on their own too. As teachers, they are aware of the pitfalls of too much dependence on parents.

Although they have studied plenty of educational theory, the Halbleibs don't have a carefully worked out set of principles for child-rearing. "We try to trust each other," says Dave. "The children know they can depend on us. We'll be there when they need us. They know we love them."

Sally says, "Parenting is the hardest job there is. When Alison was born I used to worry my responsibilities as a parent. I told myself sometimes, 'I'm ruining this child's little psyche.' It's hard to know what's right...I guess we just grope our way.

"We try to encourage them to tell us things. I know from teaching that kids sometimes need people to just listen to them."

Child Clinic in Marietta November 13 and 15

The Well Child Clinic, sponsored by the State Health Center, will be held Tuesday, Nov. 13th, and Thursday, Nov. 15th, in the Marietta Community House at 258 W. Market St., between 9am and 11:30am.

Immunizations, special testing, physical exams, and parent counseling are all available at the clinic. If you are bringing a child there for the first time, make an appointment or bring the child on Tuesday. You can phone 426-3106 during clinic hours to make an appointment.

The public health nurses also invite everyone to have his or her blood pressure checked between 11am and noon on clinic days.
