Haldeman (cont.)

[continued from back page] a volume describing freshwater mollusks in the United States. He also published a work in French on shells.

In 1844 he wrote an article on "Species and Their Distribution," in which he discussed variations that occur within a species. This work was read by Charles Darwin and was later quoted by Darwin in his "Origin of Species."

In 1843 his interests suddenly shifted to entomology. In one summer he collected 2050 specimens of various kinds of insects.

In 1841 he was appointed professor of zoology at the Franklin Institute in Philadelphia. Later, he was professor of natural history at the University of Pennsylvania.

Meanwhile, he was becoming interested in the study of language. He studied the sounds made by the human voice. One of his studies was of the sounds used in various Indian languages.

Because of his interest in phonetics he became interested in spelling reform. His interest in words led him into etymology (Study of derivations of words). He corresponded with Noah Webster about the origins of some words.

Once when he was attended a conference on language, a young man started to talk about an insect. Haldeman corrected the young man on his pronunciation of the Latin name of the insect. The young man defended his pronunciation of the insect's name. Professor Haldeman let him go on, then said, "You see, I discovered and named that insect, and a man objects to having his children ill treated."

As a result of his work in language studies, he was appointed professor of comparative philology at the University of Pennsylvania.

His favorite working place was always his home at Chiques. He travelled, but only to collect data for his studies.

His life was not entirely happy; two of his children died before growing up. He had some financial worries.

Always original and different, he became a Catholic when he was 30 years old, although he had been brought up a Protestant. He was one of the founders of St. Mary's Church in Marietta.

He died in 1880 at age 68, working in his study in the big house at Chiques.

Marietta ambulance

The Marietta Area Ambulance Association elected the following officers for the coming year: Nancy Herneison, crew chief; William Ney, assistant crew chief; Robin Eshleman, secretary-treasurer; and Steve Bailey, training officer.

Peggy L. Woodward of Rivermoor was accepted as a new member.

The ambulance's new radio will be installed on December 7th.

Nineteen calls were reported for October, and 252 calls this year (through November 16th).

The ambulance crew will start a fund drive over the holidays. Contributions may be placed with the Marietta branch of Farmers First Bank. The money will be used to pay off the remaining debt on the new ambulance, amounting at the moment to $6000.

Dear Marietta Residents, 11/27/79

This Sunday, an estimated 1,400 visitors will be in Marietta for the annual Christmas Candleslight Tour. They will come from many parts of Pa. and surrounding states to see our little town with its beautiful old homes and businesses. Many are returning from other years because they think this town is great. The Marietta Restoration Associates have heard many such comments and heartily agree!

We thank the many townspeople who have or will be giving their time and talents to prepare and decorate for this big event. We encourage everyone in their own way to exhibit the true spirit of Christmas by making our visitors feel welcome.

We also hope many of you will join in the festivities by taking the tour yourselves. As one regular tour-goer said; "I'M ALWAYS AMAZED AT THE AMOUNT OF BEAUTY, TALENT AND CREATIVITY THAT'S RIGHT HERE AT OUR DOORSTEP." Here's a unique once a year opportunity to rediscover your own town!

In summary then, we hope you will join your Christmas season celebration right here in your own town this Sunday and then have a very joyous holiday!.....

WITH WARMEST REGARDS
