The Marietta Community House as it appears today

Marietta Community House, built in memory of Lieutenant Benjamin Hiestand, still serves town

The Marietta Community House was dedicated on December 30, 1919, in memory of Lieutenant Benjamin Hiestand, who had been killed in the Air Force of the U. S. Army the previous year.

His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry S. Hiestand, and his brother, FitzGerald Hiestand, could not bear to use the insurance money paid them on Benjamin's death for any but a socially worthwhile cause, so they had the community building constructed in Benjamin's memory.

FitzGerald still lives in Marietta, but Henry Hiestand and his wife died. Mrs. Hiestand was the former Bessie FitzGerald, who spent her early childhood in Alaska and in Idaho, where her father was an Army Surgeon during the Nez Perce wars. Bessie's mother recorded their experiences on the frontier in letters she wrote to her mother in Columbia, letters which Bessie Hiestand later arranged to have published.
