NEW YEAR RESOLUTION

Now that the old and wornout year
Its devious course has run,
And had its customary share
Of worry, work and fun;
And Christmas, too, with all its joy
Of gifts and shopping flurry,
Has been like other Christmases
Have been and just as merry:
We greet another new-born year
With formal allocution,
Whose genesis induces us
To make a resolution.

As for your intention I'm
Not qualified to know;
But as for me I've changed my mind
About it long ago;
Which is: (and this you may believe)
I don't intend to make one;
For if I don't it stands to reason
I won't have to break one.

Movie Review Star Trek—The Motion Picture

by John Raiz

Star Trek—The Motion Picture opened recently at the Wonderland 3 Theater in Lancaster. The film seems to be doing quite well locally, judging from the early attendance at the theater.

Regardless of its artistic and entertainment value, Star Trek is attracting enormous media attention because of its reported $42 million cost, and the built-in appeal of its "Trekkie" admirers. I'm reasonably sure, based partially upon my initial observations, that the picture will attract its hard-core "Trekkie" following. The critical payback question, as I view it, involves whether or not the movie can achieve a broader-based appeal.

Douglas Trumbull and his army of technical assistants have created a visual feast, utilizing a wide array of special photographic effects. They have turned Star Trek into an endless light show. This is especially true in the space-warp sequence and the long encounter with the alien life force. In this respect, director Robert Wise's film more closely resembles Close Encounter and 2001 than it does Star Wars.

The biggest mistake the makers of Star Trek made was to overly complicate the plot and strip it of any direct action and violence. Furthermore, the reverse-anthropomorphic ending, I think, except for the case of true sci-fi followers, was a serious miscalculation also.

The original television cast is back, a little older, but unfortunately not any wiser.
