Tim & Angela Langenback have busy schedules; value the quality of time spent with children

"When we moved here four years ago, the kids were a great help in getting us established in the community," says Angela Langenback of RD3, Elizabethtown.

"Through their school and church activities, we found an easy opening for meeting new people."

Tim Langenback agrees. "It was quite a change, moving to a rural area like this," says the native of Allentown. "But as Angela said, it was very easy to get to know people here. We like the people of Lancaster County.

"The one thing that took some getting used to was the country aroma," he laughs. Son Ricky Gottlieb laughs too. "Yea," he says. "That was quite a change. But you know what. I hardly notice it now."

Tim and Angela Langenback feel that the traditions of the Lancaster County people make this a good place to live and to raise a family.

"I was brought up with good, strict values. I was taught to always give my best at whatever I was doing. I can see this in the people of Lancaster.

"It is a good thing to see some of the pride in craftsmanship that exists in Lancaster County."

"The products here are made to last," adds Tim. "We bought a picnic table recently that should last us a lifetime. You just do not find things made that way anymore."

Tim and Angela believe in teaching their children some of these values. Ricky, almost 12 (he tells us that he will really only be three on February 29, being a leap year baby) and Coreen, 13 are told what is important in life.

They are also encouraged to develop their own interests and ideas without pressure from their parents.

"I want them to know that they can depend on us if they need to," says Angela. "I also want them to become independent so that they will become responsible adults someday. It is not good to do too much for them."

"The kids have to be pretty independent," says Tim. Both he and Angela have full-time careers to which they are quite devoted.

"I see my job as a career rather than simply a job," Angela tells us. Angela is the manager of the accounting and data processing departments at Travis Mills in Lititz.

Tim is employed by CNA Insurance in Reading. He is also attending classes at the Penn State campus in Reading. This is his last year towards becoming a Charter Property Casualty Underwriter (CPCU). "It is a five year course, and it's been a long struggle," he remarks without complaint. "I will really feel good when it's over."

"I must admit that things sometimes get hectic around here," Angela says. "It is very important that Tim or I do not become wrapped up in our work and forget to listen to the kids. It is very difficult to leave the job at the office, but this must be done in a family situation."

Angela and Tim feel that they are both family oriented.

"We find that we do things as a family," she says. "It is sometimes important for Tim and I to get out alone, but usually we do things as a family. We do not always have a lot of time to spend together, especially as the kids get older, but I feel the quality of the time spent together is far more important than the quantity of time together."

Tim and Angela do get involved with the children and their problems. Ricky was in a special reading class for several years. The program that he was involved with also got his parents involved.

"At first we just attended sessions because parents were obligated by the program to do so," Angela says. "However, we soon became quite involved. We studied various parenting effectiveness manuals and learned TA (transanalytical analysis) for kids. Not only did we learn something about the children, but we also learned a great deal about ourselves through these sessions. They were one way that we could become actively involved with the kids."

The Langenbacks find that as Ricky and Coleen get older, the activities they are involved in increase. The day we talked with them Coleen was on a retreat with her church youth group. The family belongs to Trinity Lutheran Church in Mount Joy.

Ricky is quite active in the boy scouts and recently returned from the Frozen Trail weekend at Camp Mack.

"When both the kids were at Grandview, things were much easier. Now we need a shuttle service around here," laughs Tim.

Ricky, who is in sixth grade, will be going to the junior high next year, and Coleen will be starting high school. "Things will really be busy then!"

Even though much of her time is spent with her job and her children, Angela stills finds time for herself, something she feels is very important. She attends an aerobic dance class twice a

MRA to see film

The regular monthly meeting of the Marietta Restoration Associates will be held in the Marietta Community House February 21 at 7:30 pm.

A film strip dealing with the modern period of architecture, beginning with the 1890's. It will trace the development up to the present time by featuring such well-known architects as Frank Lloyd Wright and others. These 20th Century buildings have now become classics and are well worth preserving.
