THE THREE TRAVELLERS

God, notwithstanding creed or zone,
By many different names is know.

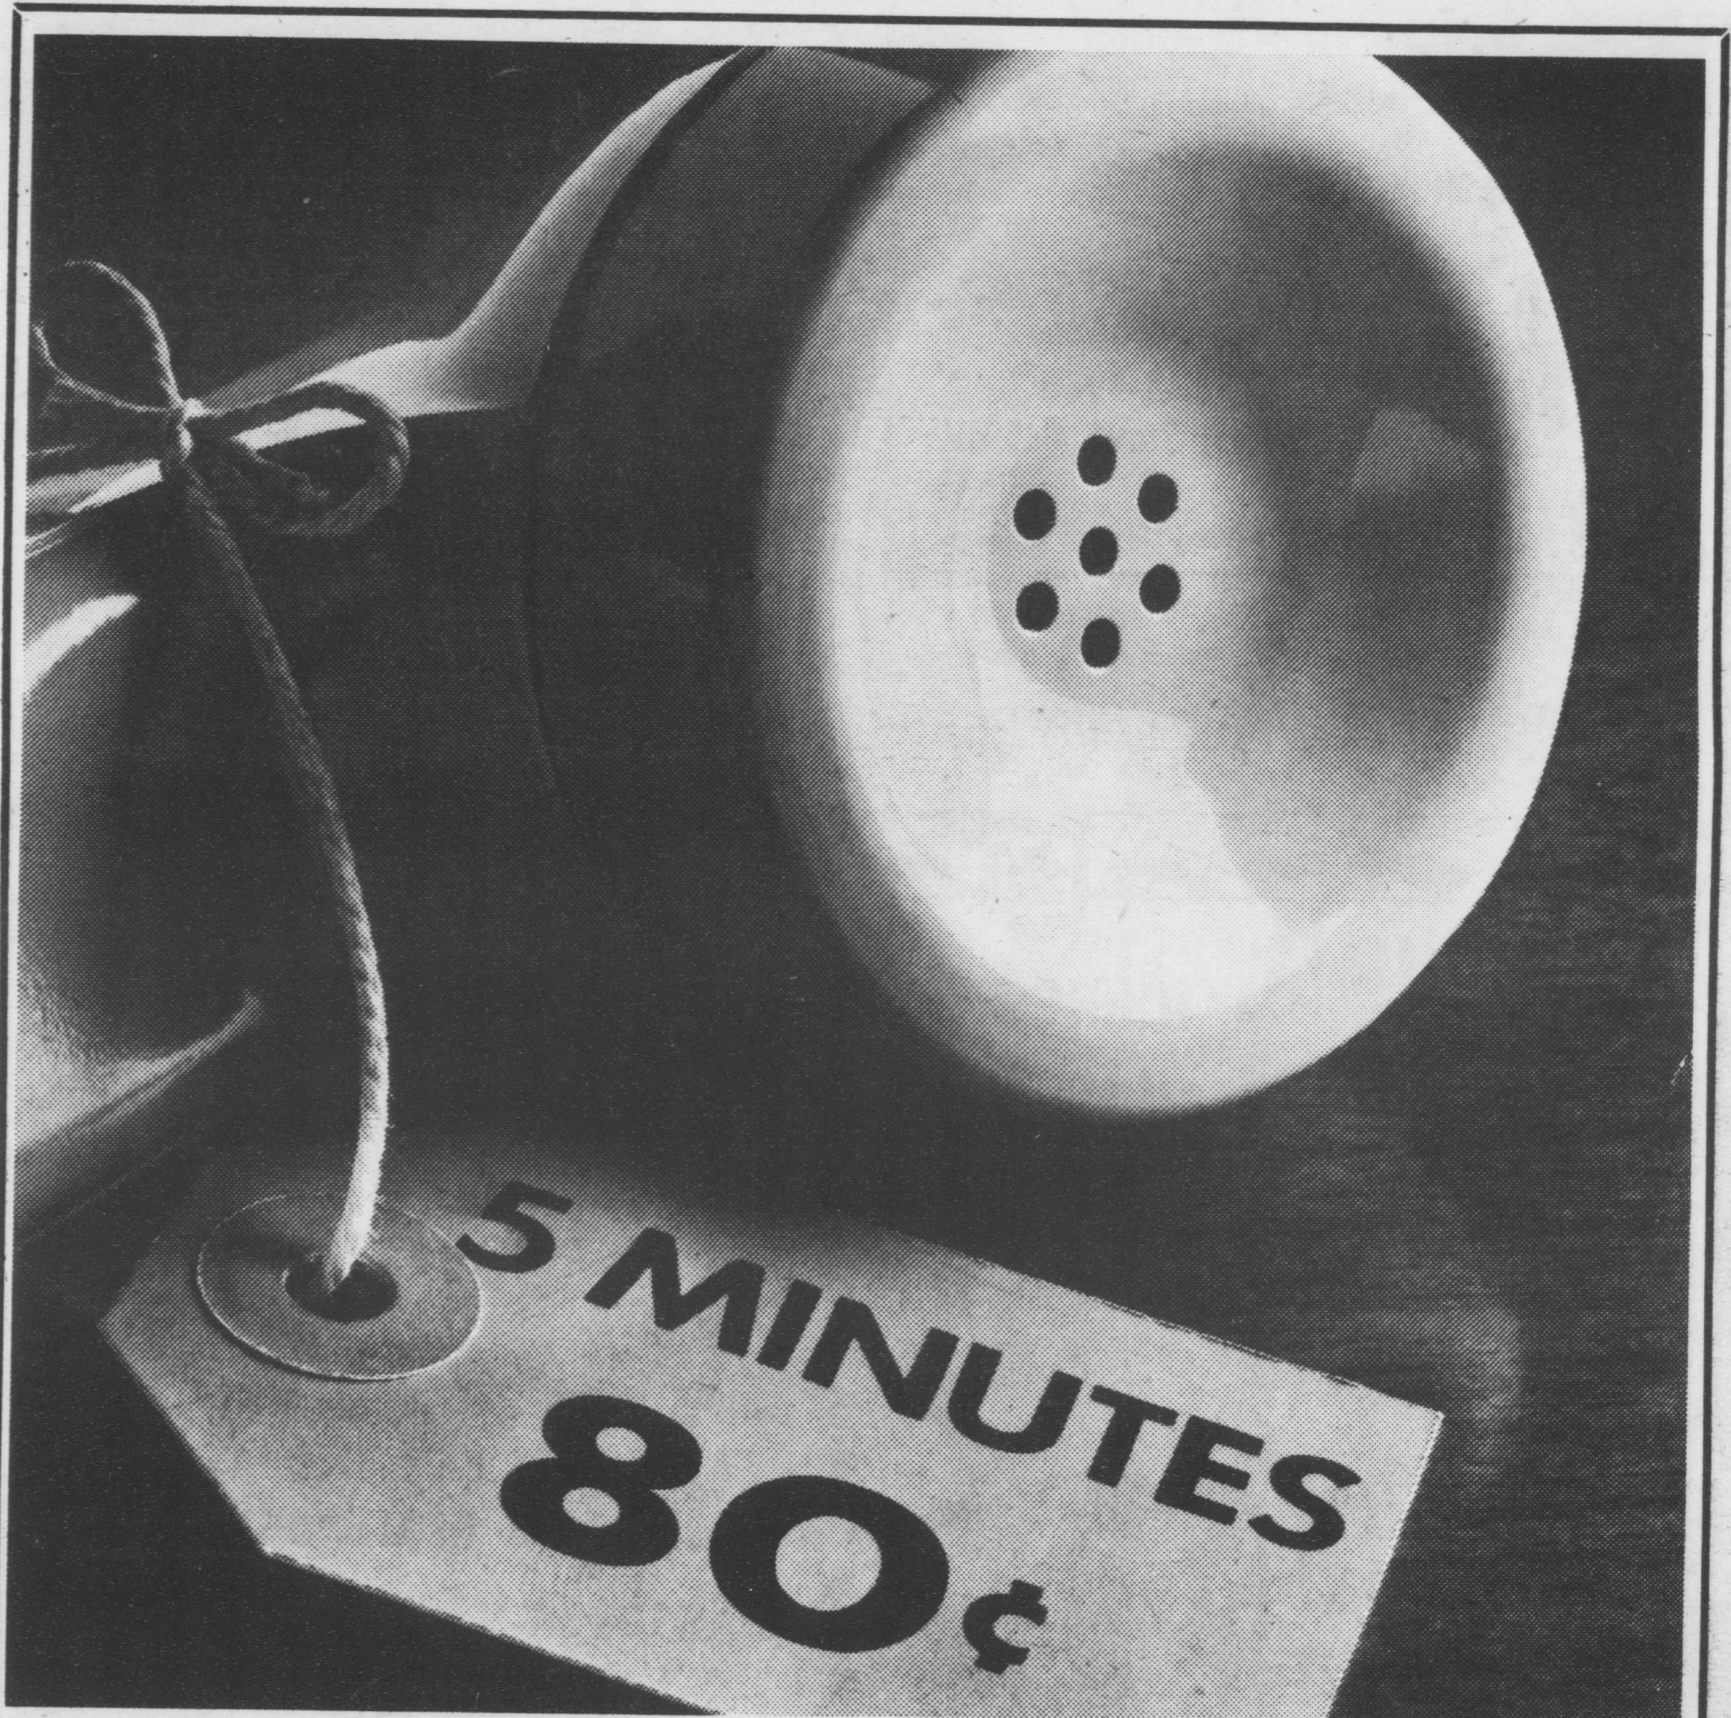

A Greek, an Arab and a Persian,
Companing on an excursion,
Paused and readying dish and cup,
Sat down at Kufa's gate to sup.
For supper did the Greek attest
"Staphele," of all food was best.
"Nay," said the Arab, "well I wot
Than 'eneb' better food is not."
"Faugh!" said the Persian; "Out on thee!
Better than 'angur' food can't be."
Thus word by word their anger rose
Till quarrel almost came to blows.

Just then a peasant and an ass
With ripe grapes laden chanced to pass,
Which instantly revealed its flaws
And brought the argument to pause.
"Stephele!" pointing, said the Greek.
"Eneb!" the Arab, low and meek,
And giving grape a native version,
"Angar, truly," said the Persian.

Thus was the food they craved the same
But labeled with a different name.
