Flea Market Finds

Old baby doll valued at $75

By Dan D'Imperio

Q. Is my childhood Baby Dainty doll now considered a collectible?—Nan, Corning, N.Y.

A. Baby Dainty scored an instant hit with playroom occupants upon her introduction in 1912. The EFFanBEE Doll Co. of New York City kept this choice collectible in production for the next 10 years. She had a composition shoulder head, painted molded hair, and painted features. Originally, the doll wore one of the firm's metal heart-shaped bracelets. Some specimens were marked simply "EFFanBEE", others "EFFanBEE, Baby Dainty". Presently, the 15-inch tall Baby Dainty doll sells for a delightful $75.

Q. Would it be possible to assist me in appraising a small collection of ink bottles?—Ralph, Waco, Tex.

A. A review of present day prices indicates that ink bottles have left a permanent mark on collectors: Bixby, C-590, $37; Carter's New Carmine Writing Fluid, 1906, $10; Harrison's Columbian, etched, aqua, 1 1/4-inch tall, $60; S.P. Dunbar, OP, C-520, $140; Stafford's Master, 6-inch tall, $27; Underwood's Master, cobalt, 9 1/4-inch tall, $35.

Q. What company produced the Horseshoe Depression glass pattern?—Millie, Souderton, Pa.

A. The Indiana Glass Co. of Dunkirk, Ind., added this mold etched pattern to production schedules between 1930 and 1933. Depression period consumers could purchase modestly priced dinner services in crystal, green and yellow. The pattern consisted of circular panels of double lines and beading enclosing elaborate scrollwork designs. Originally the Horseshoe pattern was referred to as the No. 612 design. Trying to acquire a complete tableware service? Take along your lucky horseshoe for this pattern is far from plentiful! Value guide: oval vegetable bowl, green, $10.

Q. When was upholstered wicker furniture fashionable?—Mr. J. P., St. Louis, Mo.

A. By the second decade of the 1900s, upholstered wicker pieces were being advertised by the nation's foremost retail outlets. Sears, Roebuck and Co. offered a three-piece set consisting of a settee, rocking chair and armchair for just $26.50. And to think it was upholstered in a "floral figured art pattern cretone in bright colors." A decade later upholstered wicker furniture was still flabbergasting flappers! Value guide: rocker, floral upholstery, circa 1925, $165.
