Flea Market Finds

Collectors seek old box cameras

By Dan D'Imperio

Q. "Tucked away in the attic we discovered a marigold candle lamp in the Grape and Cable pattern."—Mrs. W. R., Gary, Ind.

A. If you want to light up the life of a Carnival Glass buff, simply tease him with a candle lamp from the famed Northwood Glass Company. Generally, their "N" within a circle trademark may be found on the candlestick portion of these fantastic finds. The Northwood firm excelled in creating Carnival glass confections in the early 1900s. Many flea marketeers consider their green, purple and marigold candle lamps to be just a shade above the rest. Value guide: Candle lamp, marigold, $500.

Q. "Prices on early box cameras would be appreciated."—Henry, Medford, Ore.

A. Flea market shoppers battle for early box cameras of leather, wood, cardboard and metal. Even some of the plastic models from the 1930s fetch snappy returns. Those dating prior to World War I often bring prices capable of making photographic collectors shudder! Value guide: Bullet, No. 2c, 3½ inches by 3½ inches, $32; Kodak, No. 3, circa 1890, $300; Tengor, Zeiss, 1930s, $24.

Q. "Our sled figural napkin ring is marked 'Wilcox Silver Plate Co.'"—Mr. and Mrs. B. R., Hattiesburg, Miss.

A. Once the first napkin ring patent was granted in 1869, numerous American firms began producing these silver novelties. One active maker was the Wilcox Silver Plate Co. of Meriden, Conn., established by a group of investors in 1865. Originally, the firm was organized as the Wilcox Britannia Co. In 1898 they became a part of the International Silver Co. Figural napkin rings fetch fancy returns and your old-fashioned sled sells for a neat $60.

Q. "I just missed purchasing a Buck Rogers 'Dangerous Mission' pop-up book for $51!"—Bill, Parsons, Kan.

A. Blue Ribbon Books, Inc., undoubtedly prompted by the successful launching of the Buck Rogers comic strips and radio programs, introduced two pop-up books related to this space hero in 1935. "Buck Rogers in Strange Adventures in the Spider Ship" featured Buck and Wilma in three eye-popping pop-ups. A smaller book "Buck Rogers in a Dangerous Mission" also pictured them in "mission impossible" type feats. Missing out on a bargain priced "Dangerous Mission" pop-up is a "close encounter of the wrong kind," for prices presently hover in the $40 to $50 vicinity!
