a doctor, ... of a summer garden, just so he could have that her heart wanted.

Finally she saw a way out of her dilemma. She would marry some one who would consent to a divorce immediately at the ceremony. She would thus be filling the terms of the will and secure her fortune and could then follow the dictates of her heart.

So she advertised, and among the answers received selected that of a young doctor who had been a year out of school and had had two cuses, having been called once by a spinster lady to treat her favorite tabby for indigestion and having assisted a veterinary surgeon in setting the leg bone of a horse that had been hurt in a runaway.

The young physician promptly jumped at the opportunity of marrying the young woman, and they were accordingly united. But after the ceremony the doctor flatly refused to be divorced. The young woman's guardian and brothers were living in her house, over which, of course, as long as she remained single she had no control, as it did not belong to her until she had complied with the terms of the will.

The doctor went over and turned the relatives into the street. He hung out his shingle in front of the house and bought a fine carriage and which he, of course, charged to his wife. His notoriety brought him admiration and love of the young woman, and as he had fallen in love with her at first sight all thought of divorce was abandoned, and there is no happier home in Copenhagen.

A Hopeless Case.

Lady—What is the matter with my husband?

Doctor—I cannot be sure yet, you noticed him doing anything unusual lately?

"Let me see. Well, last evening instead of lighting his cigar to smoke he left the table, he went to the library and put on his smoking jacket, smoking cap and pipe before beginning to smoke."

"Hum! My, my!" "And, later on, when he went to bed, he did the part of a wiper."
