

McLaughry has been warden of the Fort Leavenworth penitentiary. "I know Emma Goldman," he said to a Kansas City Times reporter. "She is a very ladylike person; finely educated, of prepossessing appearance and a person of power. In Chicago we then tried not to dignify the anarchist movement by making arrests. We simply watched them and preserved order at their meetings. There were then about 25 or 30 leading anarchists in the central group, and probably 3,000 to 5,000 in the city. "Something will have to be done to control the anarchists. Of course, after the lamentable death of President McKinley, the question of anarchy will assume a paramount place in the discussions of the prison congress."

Both Mr. Drake and Maj. McCloughry were vehement in their aspersions against anarchists. They said the sessions of the Kansas City prison congress might evolve a plan that would be practicable to handle these enemies of society. At all events, the deliberations of the congress will have much weight in the earnest discussion of the matter, and inasmuch as this will be the first formal body of its kind to take the matter up, it can readily be foreseen that its deliberations and conclusions will attract world wide attention.

About 300 delegates from penal and reformatory institutions all over the country will attend the congress. Many others who are interested in prison reform, in the subject of anarchy and like questions, are also expected to be present. The congress will convene on Saturday, November 8, and will last until the following Wednesday.

Mr. Drake and Maj. McCloughry said that probably one question to be considered was that of admitting newspapers into jails and penitentiaries. Heretofore they have been rigidly excluded, except in those instances where they were admitted after they had been "expurgated" of all criminal news. The idea is growing steadily to let prisoners have the papers. The "lock step" will also be considered.

In discussing the president's death, Maj. McCloughry said he had observed that eastern newspapers had suggested that Senator Wellington, of Maryland, should be impeached for his unfortunate remarks about the president. Maj. McCloughry suggests that the senator be ostracized by his colleagues. If they were to "cut" him, and address or deal with him, it would be absolutely necessary, and would be supreme and
