Conductor Killed.

George Himes, a freight conductor on the Pennsylvania Railroad between Harrisburg and Philadelphia, and who resided in the former city, was fatally injured on the railroad at the tower, in this place about 2 o'clock on Saturday morning. He was struck by an engine of an eastbound freight and died from his injuries shortly after the accident.

Himes was in charge of train drawn by engine No. 1852, and stopped here for the purpose of putting off a disabled car. The latter was being run into a siding and conductor Himes was standing on the south track. He failed to notice the approach of an east bound freight drawn by engine No. 1934 and was struck and hurled from the track. When found by one of his crew he muttered, 'turn me over.' The body was taken to the station and upon examination showed that he received serious internal injuries and was cut about the head and side of the body. The remains were taken to Mount Joy, where they were prepared for burial, and later in the day were sent to the home of the deceased in Harrisburg.

Himes had been in the employ of the company over twenty years and was a well-known and popular railroad worker. Before moving to Harrisburg he resided in Columbia. Deceased was about 45 years old and is survived by a widow and one son.

HERE'S A QUEER CASE

Husband Declined to Be Divorced from Pretty Bride.

Romance Connected with a Matrimonial Advertisement Has Set All the Tongues of Old Copenhagen Wagging.

Copenhagen was somewhat startled awhile ago by an advertisement that appeared in the personal columns of Politiken, the leading newspaper of the city. It takes a good deal to startle Copenhagen, but this advertisement succeeded in accomplishing what many have regarded as an impossibility. The advertisement read as follows:

"Pro forma, in order to be freed from unhappy relations, a young lady wishes to marry a young or old physician, lawyer or officer. A divorce is desired immediately after the ceremony. The lady has a fortune of 50,000 kroners. Communications may be addressed to No. 9,690 at the office of this paper."

After many weeks of anxious gossiping and the grave discussion of over a thousand conflicting rumors, the true story of the affair began to creep around and Copenhagen breathed free again and once more resumed its phlegmatic calm. The young woman had found a man willing to marry her. He had married her. The marriage had effectually relieved her of unpleasant relations because her husband had kicked them all out of the house.

Like the hero of E. P. Roe's novel, "He Fell in Love with His Wife," and refused to be divorced, and the young woman accepted the situation and the young couple have settled down, and it is to be hoped, like the nice young people in the fairy tales, that they will live happily ever after.

The young woman had been left an orphan at an early age. A fortune of 50,000 kroners ($14,000) had been left her by her father, to be given her on the day of her marriage. Her father did not wish the 50,000 kroners, which in Copenhagen is considered quite a snug little fortune, to be dissipated by some brawling young student or beer-house lounge, whom his daughter, in the absence of proper parental guidance, might select for a husband, so he carefully stipulated in the will that her fortune was only to be given to her on condition that she married a "physician, lawyer or officer of the army or navy."

The young woman lived with her uncle, who had been appointed her guardian. She was an independent young woman, and longed to see the world when she could come into her own and do as she pleased. Her brother and guardian and all her other relatives had arranged themselves into a committee whose mission in life was to secure a husband for the young woman, and they discharged lawyers, doctors and officers at her head with the greatest zeal and persistency.

She wanted to be heart free and marry the man of her choice, and she didn't care whether he was a lawyer, doctor or officer.
