Kansas City Flood Items.

J. B. Hipple, formerly of this place, with a force of workmen reached the rear of his office in a boat, Friday, June 9. The water was still 12 feet deep in the back yard. On top of the roof of his building was a deposit of mud left by the flood varying in depth from 6 inches to two feet. Eight tons of this deposit were shoveled from the roof. While this work was going on there was still two feet of water covering the first floor, the basement containing his presses was filled, and on one side of the press room a heavy raft was lodged. He says: Kansas avenue was in a deplorable condition. Wrecked buildings after wrecked buildings were on top of each other to the height of 20 feet. These were the cheap frame buildings that the water had swept from their foundations and hurled against the stronger buildings on the avenue where they lodged, making an appalling sight. With a few exceptions the brick buildings are standing but the stocks of goods they contained are almost wholly ruined. The same is true of household furniture. Some persons who visited their homes threw the furniture out of the window to let the current sweep it off and save the trouble of destroying it. The ten drug stores of Armourdale are total wrecks and their stocks alone were worth $50,000. The only way of crossing the river between the two cities for many days after May 31 was by boats plying between the two shores. The crowds that wanted to use them were so dense that many people struggled for hours to secure passage, and had to risk their lives before succeeding. The fare which was $5 one way at first, has been gradually reduced to reasonable rates, and pontoon bridges are now being built at different places.

When the flood came B. Allmeyer had a stock of clothing and gent's furnishing goods valued at $14,000. Last week he sold the stock for $250. Twenty-two pianos which had been sold by one house on the installment plan in Armourdale have been examined by the agent since the waters subsided, but not one is worth moving. By a picture of his dead mother found on the roof of the building Carleton E. Renner identified his former home. The cow in the box car near the T. V. elevator held out till Thursday. Then she drowned. The widow of Sam Graham, locomotive engineer, lost all she had in the world. J. I. Boyer lost 700 hogs in the flood. He had driven them on the second deck at the stock yards, but they were drowned. The loss is $10,000. David Cornprobst, a flood refugee, died Tuesday afternoon. It is thought that exposure during the flood hastened his death. A widow and three daughters survive. He was a Pennsylvanian. After the waters subsided below the first floors, many of the floors fell in from the weight of the mud which, in many instances, was two feet deep, and in one instance the floor falling in caused a large furniture store to collapse altogether. Many buildings still standing have been pronounced unsafe by the building inspector. Hundreds of dead animals are to be found in every part of the flooded district, and the stench arising from them is sickening. These carcasses are being buried, but the serious problem is how to dispose of the offensive slim deposited in the houses, sewers and on the ground in every direction, as it is a menace to the health of the whole community.

Mr. Hipple says editorially that the people are cheerful under these distressing conditions and that any men who have lost their all and are in middle life, are determined to stay in Armourdale and begin the battle of life once more. Most of the matter in the foregoing article is gleaned from Weekly Press, Mr. Hipple's which comes to hand since the one-fourth its former size and is at another office. We learn, however, from a private source that Mr. Hipple's building stands will be about $3,000. That is not altogether depressed view from the leading editorial paper, which is as follows:

The Flood Was Charitable. The fury of the flood was tempered with charity. Two plow wheelbarrows and a hoe landed front door of the Press office. Things are of good use in clearing out the deep deposits of mud.

The County Fair.

The management of the Lancaster County Fair and Horse and Cattle Show held a meeting on Wednesday afternoon and gave out the contract for the tents. The canvas area will be much larger than it was at last fall's fair. The present bleachers at the race track will be extended seventy feet and new bleachers will be erected between the main entrance to the race track and the office building. Other very desirable improvements are contemplated, the intention being to have this year's fair outrival that of last year.

Definition of a Baby.

"What is a baby?" is asked, then following a complicated definition is given: The prince of Wales, a dweller in Lapland, a morning caller, noonday crawler, midnight brawler, only possession that never excites envy, a key that opens the hearts of all classes, the rich and the poor alike, in all countries; a stranger with unspeakable cheek that enters the house without a stitch to his back and is received with open arms by all.
