

at the top, disclosed a round sinewy neck, ruddy and corded like the bark of the fir. Thick muscular arms, covered with a reddish down, protruded from the wide sleeves of his habit, while his white shirt, looped up upon one side, gave a glimpse of a huge knotty leg, scarred and torn with the scratches of brambles. With a bow to the Abbot, which had in it perhaps more pleasant than reverence, the novice strode across to the carved prie-dieu which had been set apart for him, and stood silent and erect, with his hand upon the gold bell which was used in the private prisons of the Abbot's own household. His dark eyes glanced rapidly over the assembly, and finally settled with a grim and menacing twinkle upon the face of his accuser.

The chamberlain rose, and having slowly unrolled the parchment-scroll, proceeded to read it out in a thick and pompous voice, while a subdued rustle and movement among the brothers bespoke the interest with which they followed the proceedings.

"Charges brought upon the second Thursday after the feast of the Assumption, in the year of our Lord thirteen hundred and sixty-six, against Brother John, formerly known as Hordle John, or John of Hordle, but now a novice in the holy monastic order of the Cistercians. Read upon the same day at the Abbey of Beaulieu in the presence of the most venerated Abbot Berghersh and of the assembled order.

"The charges against the said Brother John are the following, namely, to wit: "First, that on the above-mentioned feast of the Assumption, small beer having been served to the novices in the proportion of one quart to each four, the said Brother John did drain the pot at one draught, to the detriment of Brother Paul, Brother Porphyry, and Brother Ambrose, who could scarce eat their non-meat of salted stock-fish, on account of their exceeding dryness."

"At this solemn indictment the novice raised his hand and twitched his lip, while even the placid senior brothers glanced across at each other and coughed to cover their amusement. The Abbot alone sat gray and immutable, with a drawn face and a brooding eye.

"Item, that having been told by the master of the novices that he should restrict his food for two days to a single three-pound loaf of bran and beans, for the greater honoring and glorifying of St. Monica, mother of the holy Augustine, he was heard by brother Ambrose and others to say if your eyes were upon your sandals, how came ye to see this smile of which ye prate? A week in your cells, false brethren, a week of rye bread and lentils, with double Lauds and double Matins, may help ye to a remembrance of the laws under which ye live."

"At this sudden outburst of wrath the two witnesses sank their faces on their chests, and sat as men crushed. The Abbot turned his angry eyes away from them and bent them upon the novice, who met his searching gaze with a firm and composed face.

"Who has thou to say, Brother John, upon these weighty things which are urged against thee?" "Little enough, good father, little enough!" said the novice. "For the matter of the rye, I had not eaten from the field and had scarce got the taste of the thing before mine eye lit upon the bottom of the pot. It may be, too, that I spoke somewhat shortly concerning the bran and the beans, the same being poor provender and unfitted for a man of my inches. It is true also that I did lay my hands upon this jack-fool of a Brother Ambrose, though, as you can see, I did him little scath. As regards the maid, too, it is true that I did hurt her, and shoon, whilst I had but my wooden sandals, which could take no hurt from the water. I should have thought shame upon my manhood, as well as my monkhood, if I had held back my hand from her." He glanced around as he spoke, with the half-amused look which he had worn during the whole proceedings.

"There is no need to go further," said the Abbot. "He has confessed to all. It only remains for me to portion out the punishment which is due to his evil conduct."

"He rose and the two long lines of brothers followed his example, looking sideways with scared faces at the angry prelate. "John of Hordle," he thundered, "you have shown yourself during the two months of your novitiate to be a recreant monk, and one who is unworthy to wear the white garb which is the outer symbol of the spotless spirit. That dress shall therefore be stripped from thee, and thou shalt be cast into the outer world without benefit of clerkship, and without lot or part in the graces and blessings of those who dwell under the care of the blessed Benedict. Thou shalt be back neither to Beaulieu nor to any of the granges of Beaulieu, and thy name shall be struck off the scrolls of the order.

The sentence appeared a terrible one to the older monks, who had become so used to the safe and regular life of the Abbey that they would have been as helpless as children in the outer world. From their pious oasis they looked drearily out at the desert of life—a place full of stormings and strivings, comfortless, restless, and insurrection so sudden, so short, and so successful. Yet the Abbot Berghersh was a man of too firm a grain to allow one bold outbreak to imperil the settled order of his great household. In a few hot and bitter words he compared their false brother's exit to the expulsion of our first parents from the garden, and more than hinted that unless a reformation occurred some others of the community might find themselves in the same evil and perilous case. Having thus pointed the moral and reduced his flock to a fitting state of docility, he dismissed them once more to their labors and withdrew himself to his own private chamber, there to seek spiritual aid in the discharge of the duties of his high office.

The Abbot was still on his knees, when a gentle tapping at the door of his cell broke in upon his orisons. Rising in no very good humor at the interruption, he gave the word to enter; his hair, parted gray eye, and quick, delicate expression, spoke of a nature which had unfolded far from the boisterous joys and sorrows of the world. Yet there was a set of the mouth and a prominence of the chin which relieved him of any trace of effeminacy. Impulsive he might be, enthusiastic, sensitive, with something sympathetic and adaptive in his disposition; but an observer of nature's tokens would have confidently pledged himself that there was native firmness and strength underlying his gentle, monk-bred ways.

The youth was not clad in monastic habit, but in lay attire, though his furling, cloak and hose were all of a sombre hue, as befitted one who dwelt in sacred precincts. A broad leather strap hanging from his shoulder supported a scrip or satchel such as travellers were wont to carry. In one hand he grasped a thick staff pointed and shod with metal, while in the other he held his coil or bonnet, which bore in its front a broad pewter medal stamped with the image of Our Lady of Rocamadour.

"Art ready, then, fair son?" said the Abbot. "This is indeed a day of comings and goings. It is strange that in one twelve hours the Abbey should have cast off its fondest friend, and should now lose what we are fain to look upon as our choicest blossom." "You speak too kindly, father," the youth answered. "If I had my will I should never go forth, but should end my days here in Beaulieu. It hath been my home as far back as my mind can carry me, and it is a sore thing for me to have to leave it."

"Life brings many a cross," said the Abbot gently. "Who is without them? Your going forth is a grief to us as

If he will not sell Arbuckles' ARIOSA write to us. We will supply you direct. You will get greater value for your money—a better pound of coffee—full weight—than he can sell you under any other name. He cannot sell Arbuckles' ARIOSA loose, by the pound out of a bin or bag, because we supply it only in sealed packages that you can identify every time, which protect the coffee from the dust and impurities that loose coffee absorbs—and insure full weight. Coffee exposed to the air loses its flavor, strength and purity. You cannot tell where it came from—neither can the grocer—he may think he knows—but he doesn't, and all you can ever know is the price ticket. It is worth remembering that outward appearance is no indication of "cup" quality.

Grocers as a rule are honest, trustworthy men who would not consciously mislead you. Whenever one of them advises you to take loose grocery store coffee, instead of Arbuckles' ARIOSA, he doubtless believes he is doing you a favor, whereas he is really depriving you of the most wholesome and delicious beverage that you can buy, something better than anything else he can sell you for the price. The sales of Arbuckles' ARIOSA Coffee exceed the sales of all other package coffees in the United States combined, and the business of Arbuckle Bros. exceeds that of the four next largest concerns in the world, simply because the public actually receives better coffee for their money in Arbuckles' ARIOSA than they can buy in any other way.

Arbuckles' ARIOSA Coffee is good to drink—it quenches the thirst and tastes good. Most people need it. It aids digestion, increases the power and ambition to work and it makes one feel like doing things—no after depression. United States soldiers drink more coffee than the soldiers of any other nation.

If your grocer does not sell ARIOSA, write us and we will send you a Family Box.

On receipt of $1.80, express or postal money order, we will send 10 pounds of ARIOSA in a wooden box, transportation paid to your nearest freight station. The $1.80 pays for the transportation and the coffee, which will be in the original packages bearing the signature of Arbuckle Bros. that entitles you to free presents. Ten pounds—ten packages—ten signatures. If you write for it we will send free a book containing full particulars and colored pictures of nearly 100 presents for users of Arbuckles' ARIOSA Coffee.

The price of coffee fluctuates—we cannot guarantee it for any period. Address our nearest office, ARBUCKLE BROS., 71 Water Street, New York City, Dept. 2, 100 Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill., Dept. 3, Liberty Ave. and Wood St., Pittsburgh Pa., Dept. 9, 421 South Seventh Street, St. Louis, Mo., Dept. 9 that he wished twenty thousand devils would fly away with the said Monica, mother of the holy Augustine, or any other saint who came between a man and his meat. Item, that upon Brother Ambrose reproving him for his blasphemous wish, he did hold the said Brother face downward over the piscatorium or fish-pond for a space during which the said brother was able to repeat a Pater and four Aves for the better fortifying of his soul against impending death."

WITH A SHOUT HE TORE UP THE HEAVY OAKEN PRIE-DIEU.

"There was a buzz and murmur among the white-robed brethren at this grave charge; but the Abbot held up his long quivering hand. "What then?" said he.

"Item, that between Nones and Vespers on the feast of James the Less the said Brother John was observed upon the Brokenhurst road, near the spot which is known as Hatchett's Pond, in converse with a person of the other sex, being a maiden of the name of Mary Sowley, the daughter of the king's verdere. Item, that after sundry japes and jokes the said Brother John did lift up the said Mary Sowley and did take, carry, and convey her across a stream, to the infinite relish of the devil and the exceeding detriment of his own soul, which scandalous and wilful falling away was witnessed by three members of our order."

A dead silence throughout the room, with a rolling of heads and upturning of eyes, bespoke the pious horror of the community. The Abbot drew his gray brows low over his fiercely questioning eyes.

"Who can vouch for this thing?" he asked. "That can I," answered the accuser, "So too can Brother Forphyry, who was with me, and Brother Mark of the Spicarium, who hath been so much stirred and inwardly tumbled by the sight that he now lies in a fever through it."

"And the woman?" asked the Abbot. "Did she not break into lamentation and woe that a brother should so demean himself?"

overshadowed by evil. The young novice, however, appeared to have other thoughts, for his eyes sparkled and his smile broadened. It needed but to add fresh fuel to the fiery mood of the prelate.

"So much for thy spiritual punishment," he cried. "But it is to the grosser feelings that we must turn in such natures as thine, and as thou art no longer under the shield of holy church there is the less difficulty. Ho, there! lay-brothers—Francis, Nomi, Joseph—seize him and bind his arms! Drag him forth, and let the foresters and the porters scourge him from the precincts!"

As these three brothers advanced toward him to carry out the Abbot's direction the smile faded from the novice's face, like a bull at a baiting. Then, with a sudden deep-chested shout, he tore up the heavy oaken prie-dieu and poised it to strike, taking none might take him at a venture. "By the black rood of Waltham!" he roared, "if any knave among you lays a finger-end upon the edge of my gown, I will crush his skull like a filbert!"

With his thick knotted arms, two steers backward, and his bristling red hair, there was something so repellent in the man that the three brothers flew back at the very glare of him; and the two rows of white monks strained away from him like poplars in the tempest. The Abbot only sprang forward, with shining eyes; but the chancellor and the master of hums upon either arm and wrestled him out of danger's way.

"He is possessed of a devil," they shouted. "Run, Brother Ambrose, Brother Joachim! Call Hugh the Mill, and Woodman Wat, and Raoul with his arbalast and bolts! Tell them that we are in fear of our lives! Run, run, for the love of the Virgin!"

well as yourself. But there is no help, I had sworn my foreword and sacred promise to your father, Ecrite, the Franklin, that at the age of twenty you should be sent out into the world to see for yourself how you liked the savor of it. Seat thee upon the settle, Alleyn, for you may need rest ere long."

The youth sat down as directed, but reluctantly and with diffidence. The Abbot stood by the narrow window, and his long black shadow fell diagonally across the rush-tewn floor.

"Twenty years ago," he said, "your father, the Franklin of Minstead, died, leaving to the Abbey three hides of rich land in the hundred of Malmesbury, and leaving to us also his infant son on condition that we should rear him until he came to man's estate. This he did partly because your father was dead, and partly because you, either already given signs of that fierce and rude nature which would make him no fit companion for you. It was his desire and request, however, that you should remain in the cloisters, but should at a ripe age return into the world. Whither will you first turn?"

"To my brother's at Minstead," he replied. "I have been an unduly and violent man there in the more need that I should seek him out and see whether I cannot turn him to better ways."

The Abbot shook his head. The Socman of Minstead hath earned an ill name over the countryside," he said. "If you must go to him, see at least that he doth not tye you to the narrow path upon which you have learned to tread. But you are in God's keeping and Godward should you ever look in danger and in trouble. Above all, shun the snares of women, for they are ever set for the foolish folk of the young. Kneel, my child, and take an old man's blessing."

then, with a lighter heart and a stouter courage that the young man turned up before the river Exe, while the latter, following him to the stair-head, finally commended him to the protection of the holy Julian, patron of travellers.

Underneath, in the porch of the Abbey, the monks had gathered to give him a last God-speed. Many had brought some parting token by which he should remember them. There was Brother Bartholomew with a crucifix carved of ivory, and Brother Luke with a white-backed psalter adorned with golden beads, and Brother Francis with the "Slaying of the Innocents" most daintily set forth upon vellum. All these were duly packed away deep in the traveller's scrip, and above them old pippin-faced Brother Athanasius had placed a parcel of simnel bread and rammel cheese, with a small flask of the famous blue-sealed Abbot's Benedict. So, amid handshakes and laughings and blessings, Alleyn Edricson turned his back upon Beaulieu.

At the turn of the road he stopped and gazed back. There was the wide-spread building which he knew so well, the Abbot's house, the long church, the cloisters with their line of arches, all bathed and mellowed in the evening sun. There too was the broad sweep of the river Exe, the old stone well, the canopied niche of the Virgin, and in the centre of it, the cluster of white-robed figures who waved their hands to him. A sudden mist swam up before the young man's eyes, and he turned away upon his journey with a heavy heart and a choking throat.

It is not, however, in the nature of things that a lad of twenty, with young life glowing in his veins and all the vigor of his staff and whistling as merrily as the birds in the thicket. The road along which he travelled was scarce as populous as most other roads in the kingdom, and far less so than those which lie between the havens of the coast. Yet from time to time the boy met other wayfarers, and more than once was overtaken by strings of pack-mules and horsemen journeying in the same direction as himself.

The night had already fallen, and the moon was shining between the rifts of ragged, drifting clouds, before Alleyn Edricson, footsore and weary from the unwonted exercise found himself in front of the forest inn, understood upon the outskirts of Lyndhurst. The building was long and low, standing back a little from the road, with two flambeaux blazing on either side of the door as a welcome to the traveller. From one window there thrust forth a long pole with a bunch of greenery tied to the end of it—a sign that liquor was to be sold within. As Alleyn walked up to it he perceived that it was rudely fashioned out of beams of wood, with twinkling lights all over where the glow from within shone through the chinks. The roof was poor and thatched; but in strange contrast to it there ran all along under the eaves a line of wooden shields, most gorgeously painted with chevron, bend, and saltire and every heraldic device. By the door a horse stood tethered, the ruddy glow beating strongly upon his brown head and patient eyes, while his body stood back in the shadow.

Alleyn stood still in the roadway for a few minutes, reflecting upon what he should do. It was, he knew, only a few miles further to Minstead, where his brother dwelt. On the other hand, he had never seen his brother since childhood, and the reports which had come to his ears concerning him were seldom to his advantage. By all accounts he was a hard and a bitter man. It might be an evil start to come to his door so late and claim the shelter of his roof. Better to sleep here at this inn, and then travel off to Minstead in the morning. If his brother would take him in, well and good. He would bide with him for a time and do what he might to serve him. If, on the other hand, he should have lardened his heart against him, he could only go on his way and do the best he might by his skill as a craftsman and a scrivener. At the end of a year he would be free to return to the cloisters, for such had been his father's request. A monkish upbringing, one year in the world after the age of twenty, and then a free selection one way or the other—it was a strange course which had been marked out for him. Since it was, however, he had no choice but to follow it, and if he were to begin by making a friend of his brother, he had best wait until morning before he knocked at his dwelling.

The rude plank door of the inn was ajar, but as Alleyn approached it there came from within such a gust of rough laughter and chatter of tongues that he stood irresolute upon the threshold. Summoning courage, however, and reflecting that it was a public dwelling, in which he had as much right as any other man, he pushed it open and stepped into the common room. (To be Continued Next Week.)

Opportunity. Master of human destinies am I! Fame, love, and fortune on my footsteps wait. Cities and fields I walk; I penetrate Deserts and seas remote, and passing by Hovel and mart and palace, soon or late I knock unbidden once at every gate. "If sleeping wake—if feasting, rise before I turn away. It is the hour of fate, And they who follow me reach every state. Mortals desire, and conquer every foe Save death; but those who doubt or hesitate, Condemned to failure, penury and woe, Seek me in vain and uselessly implore, I answer not and I return no more." —John James Ingalls.

Breaking the News. Passerby—Is that your pork down there on the road, gov'nor? Farmer—Pork! What d'ye mean? There's a pig o' mine out there. Passerby—Ah, but a motor car has just passed.

FREE

WE WILL GIVE YOU ABSOLUTELY FREE this Reliable Repeating Air Rifle, which shoots 200 times without reloading, and being made of the best grade of steel, finely nickel-plated, except the stock, which is made of solid walnut, is just the thing for small game or target practice for this 200 foot long, drawer automatic magazine, which has a load of French mornice, finely polished metal points and dust caps, and is fitted with imported lenses through which you can see objects miles away; or this elegant appeared even wind and stem set. Absolutely made and fully guaranteed. Gold watch, which is not a pocket clock, but a watch equal in appearance and time keeping qualities to a fifty dollar gold watch; or this Reliable Camera and complete printing and developing outfit, including dry plates, etc., for sale at 25¢. Our handsome jewelry, now at 10¢ each. These novelties are positively the best and handsomest ever offered and are bound to sell at high prices. Everyone of your friends will be glad to buy one or more from you as they are so cheap at the price. JUST SEND YOUR NAME and we will send them to you by mail, postpaid. When you send the $2.40 you receive and we will send you FREE your choice of above article; the same day we receive your remittance. You have our promise on our list of you do want any of these.

Write us today, DEXEL MFG. CO., DEPT. 105 CHICAGO, ILL.

Earn More Money

International Correspondence Schools, Box 917, SCANTON, PA.

Please explain, without further obligation on my part, how I can qualify for a larger salary in the position which I have marked X

Book-keeper	Mechan. Draftsman
stenographer	Telephone Engineer
Administrative Writer	Electric Lighting Supt.
Show Card Writer	Mechan. Engineer
Window Trimmer	Surveyor
Dress-cutting Designer	Mechanical Engineer
Illustrator	Civil Engineer
Civil Servant	Electrical Engineer
Chemist	Architect-Draftsman
Exhibit Mill Supt.	Architect
Electroplater	Structural Engineer
Elec. Engineer	Bridge Engineer
Foreman Plumber	Mining Engineer

Name _____
Street and No. _____
City _____ State _____

Secure Your Future

To earn more money—to secure your future—to succeed in life—cut out, fill in and mail to the International Correspondence Schools the above coupon. They will show you how you can fit yourself easily and quickly in your spare time to get more money in your present position, or change to a more congenial and better paying occupation.

Mind, the sending of this coupon does not obligate you to pay one cent. It simply gives the I. C. S. the opportunity of proving how easy it is for you to improve your condition right at home without neglecting your present work.

No risk to run. No books to buy.

The I. C. S. is an institution with an invested capital of over $5,000,000, and a reputation of 14 years' successful work. It has taken a day labourer and qualified him as an electrician with a salary of $3000 a year. It has taken a bricklayer and qualified him to become a building contractor with a business of his own of $200,000 annually. It has taken a sailor and qualified him to establish his own a yearly business of $50,000. It has taken tens of thousands of men and women of every age and in every walk of life and in a few months qualified them to double, triple, quadruple their salary. To learn who they are; how it was done; how you can do the same, fill in the coupon and mail it to-day.

Succeed in Life