EDITORIAL

There can be no doubt that it is a mistake to eat more than once a day. It is fearfully expensive.

The Chinese issued bank notes nearly five thousand years ago. Most of them are probably outlawed by this time.

Colonel Roosevelt is a brave man but when he went hunting in Africa he kept well away from the preserves of King Leopard of Belgium.

Spain seems to be in about the same predicament as the boy who has to contend with green-apple cramps while fighting yellow jackets.

The cannon used at the German army arc to be fitted with the new Maxim device to stop their noise. Our own Cannon would stand some miffing also.

"The religion of the future" is being outlined to a great extent by men who know as much about what it will be as a scientist knows when he will next change his mind.

The fact that a man was placed under arrest at Patterson, N. J., and ordered to leave the city for selling Bibles, is being taken as evidence that they are not needed there.

It is better to be an optimistic than a pessimistic. A proper mental attitude is a necessary equipment to success in any undertaking in life. Unless a man's mind first sees a goal he will not likely arrive at it.

If you are a regular reader of the advertisements in the BULLETIN you know just what is going on in the stores. If there's a bargain offered you know of them. If you are not an ad. reader you are losing a lot of valuable information.

A person is influenced by what he reads. The trusts know this and endeavor to control the news that is given the people thru the great dailies. These in turn, sometimes deceive the people so that the grafting schemes can be maintained.

Anybody can predict prosperity. One need not have any superhuman powers to do it. As a matter of fact the return of prosperity was absolutely certain the day the panic began. The same observation applies to any and every panic.

An advertisement-reader never loses an advantageous offer made by the stores. This keeping in touch with the store world and the special bargains that are always going, is a profit-making business. Buyers are coming to recognize this more and more every day, and this is but another fact as showing how important a part of successful store-keeping the advertising is.

Circulation Counts

The wise advertiser spends his money where he is assured full returns. The paper that lies about how many subscribers it has, does not appeal to advertisers. It's the paper that spends money by improving and bettering its publication and giving people the news, thereby getting many new subscribers, that interests the man who has money to spend for publicity. There is no fake or bluff about the paper that makes an honest effort and is not afraid to share its success with the public. Circulation counts.

Love and the Locksmith.
By Edward Waring.
Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

"Jimmie!" Little Mrs. Barron's voice rose shrill and anguished.

"I don't care," insisted Jimmy Barron. "I said 'dam that lock,' and you ought to be glad that I said no more!"

"It is the first time you ever darned anything I wanted you to do," reproached Mrs. Barron. "You don't love me any more, Jimmie."

"Great heavens!" cried the exasperated Barron. "Of course I love you, Nettie, but when you ask me to stop and fix this lock when I have an appointment with Chilvers at the office at 10. Anyhow, it's the janitor's business to keep the locks in repair."

Nettie turned away with a little, hazy cry. This was worse than the remark which had started the trouble. To leave her to the tender mercies of the janitor was rubbing salt in the wound.

"I have gone to mother's," wounded, and as Barron gave his wife a hasty kiss and hurried down the stairs he told himself that he would send a locksmith around to attend to the matter at once.

Of course the janitor was there to make repairs for the tenants, but he was a surly fellow whose breath smelled strongly of drink, and Nettie Barron was afraid to admit him to the cozy little apartment they called home.

For more than a week they had been having trouble with the lock that Barron had added to the fastenings provided by the landlord. There was a burglar scare in the city, and apartment houses were the favorite points of attack.

Jimmie felt that, having spent the better part of Sunday afternoon putting the lock on, Nettie could not very well expect him to keep it in repair. Thus had started the first quarrel they had had since their marriage, and Barron took the car downtown feeling anything but at ease with all the world.

The Chilvers interview was satisfactory in the extreme. It was late in the afternoon when the details were concluded, and Jimmie had entered upon a contract which meant the successful outcome of the business venture in which he had engaged.

To cap the climax it had been arranged that Chilvers, who was an out of town man, should spend the evening at the club with Jimmie, so it was past midnight when Barron reached home.

The elevator stopped running at 12 o'clock, and Jimmie toiled up the three flights of stairs to his apartment. Pinned to the door was a sheet of paper and on it the words, "I have gone to mother's."

Jimmie felt the cold perspiration bead his forehead. It had come, then. He always had thought that "going to mother's" was merely a creation of the newspaper humorist, but it was true. Nettie had probably grieved over his refusal to fix the lock and had ended by going home to her mother.

Mechanically he turned and descended the stairs. He did not want to enter the deserted apartment. It was home no longer with Nettie gone. He did not know just where he wanted to go or what he wanted to do, but he wanted to get away from the place where they had been so happy together; he wanted to walk in the cool night air and to realize what it all meant to him. He was passionately attached to Nettie, and he had not dreamed that they ever could be separated.

He thought dully of the dark, silent apartment and shuddered. He would have to move from there and go to a hotel to live. He never could enter the deserted home again. It would be like violating the tomb of their dead happiness.

He did not blame Nettie, but he bitterly reproached himself. He knew how timid Nettie was. She had feared the surly looking janitor, and she could not even speak of burglars with out a little shudder, and her husband had brutally told her that he would be darned if he would fix the door and had flung away, leaving her with only the insecure protection of the flimsy lock provided by the landlord. And this was a lock that even a child could open with the blade of a knife when the Yale lock would not work.

Perhaps the burglars had come. He rather hoped they had. He hoped that they had taken everything. It would be horrible to have to give directions for the storage of the furniture which they had selected with such loving care.

There was a sentiment attached to every chair, and tears started in his tired eyes as he remembered the little thing, though she would not tell him what she wished it so particularly for.

It had become her favorite seat when he came in tired from the office, and she cuddled down against his side, the golden head resting comfortably on his shoulder while he told her the story of his day. He changed his mind about the burglars. He did not want them to carry off the little foot-stool.

As he pondered the situation Jimmie trudged onward and gave no heed to his direction. It was almost with a shock that he found himself turning in at a gate and realized that mechanically he had walked all the way to Nettie's mother's, three long miles.

There was a light in the window of the room that had been Nettie's in their courtship days. He recalled the nights when he had passed the house just to see the light in the window and to know that all was well with her.

Now there was the light, but nothing was well. For an instant a woman's face was silhouetted against the shade, and Barron came to a sudden decision. There was an all night drug store on the corner. He would call her up and sue for pardon.

It seemed hours before there was an answer to his ringing, but at last it came, and it was Nettie's sweetly serious voice that replied.

"It's Jimmie," he said brokenly. "I got your note."

"It served you right," said Nettie severely.

"I know it does," admitted Barron. "I really meant to send a man around but the Chilvers matter drove the thought from my head and I forgot all about it."

"You have only yourself to blame," she reminded. "I asked you hundreds of times to fix the lock."

"Only about eight," corrected Barron. "But I was a brute not to do it the first time you asked. After this you won't have to ask me to do a thing a second time, dear."

Barron regarded himself in the mirrored wall contentedly. It was an imposition to treat the matter as though there had been no separation.

"Did the burglars get in?" asked Nettie interestedly.

"I don't think so," was the eager response. "But look here, Nettie. If I promised that I will always do the thing you ask me to will you be friends again, dear?"

"When I came home and found that you had left me I broke down. I walked out here from our place and never realized that I had walked so far until I found myself turning in at your gate."

There was a choking sound over the wire, and Jimmie looked hopeful. If she was crying it was a sign that she might relent.

"Where are you now?" asked the voice.

"Down at the corner," was the prompt reply. "Won't you let me come over and see you, dear?"

"You may come," assented Nettie, and Jimmie tore out of the place without even stopping to hang up the receiver. He sped up the street, and a few moments later he was on the steps and Nettie was standing in the doorway to welcome him.

As the door closed behind them a pair of soft arms were thrown about his neck and soft lips pressed his cheek.

"Jimmie, you're the absurdest boy," declared the little wife lovingly. "You didn't even try to get in the flat, did you?"

"What was the use when you were not there, sweetheart?" he asked fondly.

"You would have found out why I came to mother's," she explained. "Your horrid lock worked when I went out, but when I came home not even the janitor could make it unlock, and it was too late to find a locksmith, so I came on to mother's and left that note for you."

"And you were not angry? You didn't leave me?" demanded Jimmie.

"How could I?" she asked simply.

"You were a bad boy, Jimmie, but I love you, dear."

Jimmie took her in his arms. "I want you always to love me," he said, "and I'm going to buy you a dozen locks in the morning. What is that quotation about love and the locksmith?"

Up a Starfish Ladder.

Fishermen say that starfishes are gregarious; that you might find on the bottom an acre covered so thick with them that you couldn't walk without stepping on them, but not find another starfish for hundreds of acres around. This characteristic gregariousness the starfishes in captivity at the aquarium sometimes show, as when they assemble, as they may, all in one corner of the tank in the angle, tightly holding on there, one above another irregularly, but still close together from the bottom of the tank to the top.

And when they have assembled thus you may see another curious thing there—namely, green crabs climbing from the bottom to the top of the tank up this starfish ladder. The green crab is not one of the swimming crabs. When it goes anywhere it has to walk or climb, and so on the bottom it walks along, to climb when it comes to rocks or other obstructions. It cannot, however, climb up a vertical wall like that of a tank. But here the starfishes, one above another in the corner, make with their bodies and projecting arms convenient ridges that the green crabs can hold on by, and so they climb there up this starfish ladder, finding in this, it may be, some diversion, while as for the starfishes, they don't seem to mind it.
