announced defiantly. "I saved them on purpose for you, Phillip, so you'll have to take them. Now, you mustn't detain me a minute longer. I've got loads of other places to go to. See you at the bazaar."
"But I can't call before"—began Phillip, abruptly tearing in two several small pieces of blue cardboard.
"No, you can't," interrupted Shirley, laughing. "I'm too busy. If you need any more tickets, Phillip, let me know. Goodbye."
The bazaar opened with a blaze of social glory and continued its triumphant career for an entire week.

The center of attraction was "Shirley Burnett's little portable house," as it came to be called before the bazaar was half over. There it stood at one end of the long hall, immaculate and dainty in its coat of white and yellow, defying any one to find fault with it and inviting every one to come in for the small price of 5 cents.
Every one wanted to go in and remain to exclaim over its coziness. Not a corner of it was left unexplored, from the little living room with its artistic wicker furnishings to the diminutive kitchen with its miniature cook stove and shining rows of brand new pans and kettles.

And nearly every one lingered long enough to have tea, which Shirley served out on the porch with just as gracious hospitality as if she weren't charging the exorbitant sum of 15 cents a cup for it. The little portable house proved a most paying proposition.

And when the very last night of the bazaar it was put up at auction there were spirited bidding and much excitement.

"Four hundred and ninety dollars—four hundred and ninety dollars," called the auctioneer impressively, "for this beautiful little house with all its furnishings complete. Come, gentlemen. Some one make it five hundred. Going, going—five hundred, do I hear? Thank you, sir. Gone at five hundred to the gentleman over there on my right. Will he please step forward and give his name?"

Shirley, who had been watching the scene from a window of the living room, suddenly disappeared as the crowd parted to give the purchaser right of way.

A few minutes later Phillip Evans found her sitting on the kitchen table making pathetic little dabs at suspiciously red eyes.

"Why, Shirley Burnett!" he exclaimed. "What's the matter? You ought to be the proudest girl in the world."
"Well, I'm not," Shirley answered disconsolately. "I'm the most miserable. I can't bear to think of any one else having this little house. I want it myself. I just love it. Don't you think the porch is the cutest thing you ever saw, Phillip? Can't you just imagine sitting out on it away off somewhere in the moonlight?"

Phillip nodded. Somehow he couldn't trust himself to speak.

"And the dear little living room— isn't it the budget little room you ever saw, Phillip?"

Phillip wasn't quite sure what "budget" meant, but he nodded again. "And as for this little toy kitchen," Shirley ended dramatically, patting a nearby saucepan affectionately. "I adore everything in it! Don't you, Phillip?"

"Everything," answered Phillip solemnly, "and you, sweetheart, most of all. Oh, Shirley, can't you say the same?"

For a moment Shirley looked at him as if dozed. Then, her eyes sparkling with happiness and her cheeks growing rosier and rosier, she said softly and slowly, "I adore everything in this little kitchen, and you, sweetheart, most of all."

"You're quite sure, dearest," Phillip questioned a few minutes later as, at Shirley's request, he held up the little kitchen mirror while she rearranged her much rumpled hair, "that you love me just as much as you love the little house?"

"It's your dearest rival, Phillip," she answered playfully, "but just to prove to you that it won't count any more I—I'll congratulate whoever bought it. There, I couldn't say more. Who is he?"

"You don't know?" gasped Phillip, unable to believe his ears.

"I don't want to see the monster," explained Shirley. "Just as soon as I heard that fatal word 'Gone' I ran out here, where you found me. Phillip," she broke off excitedly, "I have the grandest inspiration! Let you and me get another house just like this and spend our honeymoon in it. I think I could get one quite cheap for you."

"But you see," confided Phillip meekly, "I've already bought this one."
"Why, Phillip Evans!" exclaimed Shirley, hugging him hard. "I don't believe it. Aren't you a love?"

An English Opinion.
"London is full of foreigners," writes a correspondent of the London Chronicle, "and you may detect them in many infallible ways. But nothing perhaps displays a man's nationality more surely than the way he eats. You may tell an Englishman, meet him where you may, by the fact that he grasps his fork firmly in his left hand and keeps it there instead of transferring it to his right hand as soon as his food is cut up. You can tell a Frenchman by his wise disregard of fish knives and salt spoons. As for Americans—well, it is amusing to read Benjamin Franklin's visit to Paris and of the horror of the lady who, when she fell upon her hands and teeth and was being disdained when she was in the same position in the same way with a knife."

ADMISSION, 5c.

Mr. Horse Owner

We, having over fifty years' experience in the harness business—and being the oldest establishment of its kind in the county,—are prepared to show you the neatest line of harness for all around use that it has ever been our good fortune to possess.

If you are in need of a set of harness for heavy, medium or light work. Stop in this store, give us an idea of what you want, and we will show you a line, and quote you prices that will be revelations.

All this harness has been made in our own shop—so we know what it is.

There are people in this county who bought harness here thirty years ago, and are still using it. We can mention names if you're doubtful.
