It has been said that there is not a section of the country where gegminous crops cannot be raised or where a domestic animal cannot be kept to eat the legume. The live stock belt is as wide as the nation.

The feeding of young chicks seems to be little understood. Breadcrumbs and granulated oatmeal are all the Saturday evenings. little chicks will need for the first food, containing as little waste matter as possible. Cheap chick foods contain so much indigestible matter that the chicks have great difficulty Peifer and family. in finding enough nutrition from them to preserve life and make them grow. Equal parts of wheat, oatmeal or hulled oats well mixed make quite commendable

Y., feeds molasses to its teams, giving each horse one half quart corn meal, one quart wheat bran, three pints sugar house syrup, and seven pounds cut hay. At noon, five quarts oats. The night ration is the same as the morning, except five pounds of loose hay is fed in addition to the cut hay which is mixed with the grain. These horses weigh from 1.700 to pearance. According to experts the sults in a saving from 20 to 27 per ent, over the old system of main-aining on oats and hay entirely. The value of sunlight for little pigs is of such great importance that t almost seems unnecessary to menknows or should know its great value. It is commonly accepted among continued period of wet, cloudy back which is seldom, if ever entirely overcome, and in many cases death results, if the period of damp, cold weather is prolonged. The only pre entative for this trouble is sunshine When the weather permits, the pigs should be out in the sun as much as possible, for if it is withheld, trouble is sure to arise. Plenty of sunshine in the clear air is almost an absolute necessity during the first few weeks of the pig's life. Pigs confined in damp, ill ventilated quarters are sure to become unthrifty and may eventually die.

It requires no more intelligence and skill to raise bees than to keep poultry. It requires a certain amount of work and at the right time, yet this in no sense equals the attention given poultry. But for some reason few farmers have bees. If it is lack of knowledge that keeps them from it then the excuse is easily overcome for there are many bee journals and books that would give the desired in ormation. If it be prevented by certain appliances. Surely no one should be kept from the enjoyment of honey because of cost The bees and the necessary equipment need not cost much. Perhaps some have een led to believe-through foolish ewspaper reports—that bees are inurious to fruit. This is not so. Bees cannot break the skin of any fruit Because they are seen sucking the uice of punctured grapes they have been falsely accused of doing the uncturing.
