

THE WEEKLY BULLETIN

VOLUME NO. 16

MOUNT JOY, PENNA., WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 13, 1911

$1.00 A YEAR

15th Annual Reunion of the Central Penna. G. A. R. Association Will be Held at Mt. Joy, Sept. 14

G. A. R. Reunion Tomorrow Will Be The Greatest Event In The History of Mount Joy

Everything Is In Readiness for The Reception and Entertainment of The Old Veterans---The Town is Beautifully Decorated---The Complete Program For The Celebration Follows:

Unfurl Old Glory Tomorrow

Only the weather man will effect the success of one of the best planned and arranged programs ever attempted on occasions of this kind in the State. Weeks, yes months ago the various committees began their earnest task in an endeavor to make the 15th annual reunion of the Central Penna. G. A. R. Association in Mount Joy the most successful ever held. All the preliminary arrangements have been perfected and all is in readiness to show the old veterans the time of their lives tomorrow.

The town is very beautifully decorated, many bands, lodges, fire companies, G. A. R. Posts and S. of V. Camps have expressed a willingness to attend, a choir of over 100 voices has been thoroughly rehearsed and bad weather only will prevent a rare treat for the thousand of visitors that are expected to be with us on this occasion.

A large stand has been erected in the park from which the choir will discourse its music. All the hotels, restaurants and many private citizens, have prepared only the best tables. There will be refreshment stands at many places thruout the town and an effort will be made to entertain all visitors in a most royal manner.

Following is the program of the day's exercises:

Morning
10.00 o'clock—Assemble at Park. Music—Germania Band.
Address of welcome—Burgess Clayton Hoffman.
Response—J. B. Patrick.
10.30 o'clock—Business meeting.

Afternoon
1.30 o'clock—parade—Chief Marshal, H. C. Schock.
Aids—David Wagner, J. Fred Fentermacher, Dr. F. L. Richards, C. N. Mumma, B. W. Brown, Geo. Cunningham.

Formation—Form on Main street, west of Market, on North and South streets and streets adjacent thereto.

at R. de moves east on Main street, west of Haven street, to West Donegan street, to Market street, to Main street, on Main street to R. R. classes.

countermarch to Manheim street, to Railroad street, to Market street, to Frank street; east on Frank street to Barbara street, to Mount Joy street, to Jacob street, to East Main street; west on East Main street to Market street and dismiss.

Presiding officer—Thos J. Brown.
3.00 o'clock—Music, band.
Prayer—Rev. F. G. Bossert.
Music—"America." Schools and audience.

Address—Dr. G. W. Berntheisel.
Music—"Flag of Freedom." Mixed Chorus.

Recitation—"Kentucky Belle" Miss Esther Ebersole.
Address—Edwin W. Jackson, Esq.
Music—Band.
Recitation—"Drummer Boy of Mission Ridge," Miss Mary Eshleman.
Music—"Star Spangled Banner." Male Chorus.
Music—Band.

Evening
7.30 o'clock—Camp fire.
Music—Band.
Prayer—Rev. C. E. Berghaus.
Address—J. B. Patrick.
Music—"Medley" Mixed Chorus.
American Patriotic Songs.
Address—Col. John M. Groff.
Music—Band.
Reminiscences—Comrades.
Music—"Our Soldier Heroes Sleeping." Male Chorus.
Address—Hugh R. Fulton.
Music—"Auld Lang Syne." Band and audience.

Mr. T. J. Brown will preside at the afternoon and evening sessions.
Five thousand 4-page programs will be printed for gratis distribution tomorrow.
Following is the parade formation as given us by Chief Marshal, Mr. H. C. Schock:

First Division
Form on West Main Street.
Mounted Constabulary.
Chief Marshal—H. C. Schock
3 Asst. Marshals—Geo. Cunningham, B. W. Brown, David Wagner.
Bugler—Arthur P. Schock.
Speakers in Carriages.
4th Regiment Band.

(Continued on Page 8)

BI-PLANE IN MT. JOY

One of the Curtis Type Will be Here Next Week

Aviator Mr. M. B. Cumbler Will Fly From Lancaster to Harrisburg and Will Stop at Mount Joy Through the Efforts of The Mount Joy Bulletin—Everybody Invited to See Him.

Yesterday the Bulletin completed arrangements to have that expert aviator Mr. M. B. Cumbler appear in Mount Joy in a biplane flying machine of the Glenn Curtis type. This will be the first "air-bird" ever seen in this town and we feel certain that nine-tenths of the citizens of our town have never seen a real Aeroplane.

This daring aviator will fly from Conestoga Park, at Lancaster, to Island Park, Harrisburg. The event will take place about Thursday or Friday of next week but definite information and full details as to time place, etc., will be announced in next week's Bulletin.

Mr. M. B. Cumbler, the aviator, and Mr. Wellington G. Jones, sporting editor of the Harrisburg Telegraph, came here by auto yesterday noon when arrangements were completed for this big event.

Mr. J. E. Schroll of the Bulletin, will select a place near this borough upon which the event will take place and the location will be such that everybody can see by close observation, the mechanism of a flying machine. The aviator will, land, stopping long enough to give the spectators a good idea of an aeroplane, and then continue on his journey to Harrisburg. The event here will be given entirely under the full direction of the Mount Joy Bulletin and we extend a most cordial invitation to everybody to attend. Don't fail to read next week's Bulletin.

A Lady Wanted
And this isn't a matrimonial bureau either. We want a young lady (a high school graduate preferred) as a linotype machine operator at this office. The work is similar to that of a typewriter. Steady employment and good wages. Apply quick if interested.

A Fine Window
The window at Mr. Harry Williams' tonsorial parlors is very beautifully decorated, the features of which are many kinds of fire arms used during the rebellion together with numerous kinds of ammunition.

Sale Was Continued
The sale of the real estate of Martin B. Metzgar which was to have been held at Newtown yesterday, was continued until Saturday, Sept. 30.

The G. A. R. are welcome and so are you to inspect the fine up-to-date line of men, women and children's wearing apparel at I. D. Beneman's Dept. Store. The store that satisfies.

The War Fifty Years Ago

Fierce Battle at Wilson's Creek In Southwest Missouri. General Lyon Moves Out of Springfield With His 6,000 Troops to Attack Enemy Under McCulloch and Price Two or Three Times as Strong---Colonel Sigel's Force Routed Early In Fight---Lyon Killed While Urging His Men Forward---Command Devolves Upon Major Sturgis---Union Forces Withdraw to Springfield---Confederates Remain on Field---Result of Battle Saves Missouri to the Union.

By JAMES A. EDGERTON.
Copyright by American Press Assoc., (Inc., 1911)

SECOND to Bull Run the battle of Wilson's Creek was the greatest fought in 1861. It was decisive in Missouri and sealed the decree that the state was to remain in the Union. These things made it important, but the death of General Nathaniel Lyon, the Union commander on that field, rendered it immortal.

After his return to Springfield from the fight at Dog Springs Lyon was in a desperate position. The time of way, and these were without training or arms, hence were useless in the fight. The facts seem to be that of effective troops the Confederates had between two and three times as many as the Federals. Lyon had repeatedly asked for re-enforcements from General John C. Fremont, then in command at St. Louis, but had asked in vain. In consequence he was far from confident of winning.

Sigel marched the south to strike the flank and rear of the enemy, and Lyon headed southwest to attack in front. Arriving while it was still dark, Lyon waited till dawn. He then surprised the Confederates preparing for opened on him a murderous volley that sent his lines reeling in confusion.

Sigel's Division Routed.

The deception was caused by the color of the uniforms, which were nearly the same in portions of the two armies. It was also stated by the Federals that the enemy carried a Union flag until close enough to fire, when they ran up their own colors. Most of the authorities agree in this statement, some of them asserting that this ruse was resorted to twice by the Confederates that day. As it was a trick often practiced in border warfare, it is credible, although the Confederate accounts of the battle do not mention it. At any rate, this was the turning point against Sigel. He now sought to withdraw, but nearly all of his troops were ambuscaded and killed or captured, Sigel himself narrowly escaping. He saved only one gun, his cavalry, dragoons and a part of his infantry.

The sudden disaster to Sigel left the entire Confederate force free to attack Lyon. This was about 10 o'clock in the morning and shortly after Price had been beaten back, Fresh Confederate troops now moved to the attack, and Lyon ordered up the Second Kansas and two companies of the First Iowa to charge the enemy's line, which was partly concealed in the brush. The Union general already had been wounded twice, once in the foot and once on the head, and had his horse shot under him, but this did not breakfast. Frying pans were hastily thrown aside for muskets. A flying picket warned General Price ("Old Pap"), who commanded the line where Lyon attacked.

GENERAL NATHANIEL LYON, KILLED AT WILSON'S CREEK, FIRST UNION GENERAL TO FALL IN WAR—PILE OF STONES ON "BLOODY HILL" MARKING SPOT WHERE LYON FELL (FROM RECENT PHOTOGRAPH BY ROBERTUS LOVE).

Leading Lyon's advance was Captain Plummer's battalion of regular infantry, two companies of volunteers and Totten's battery. These struck Rains' pickets about 4 o'clock in the morning. The Union forces at once formed in a skirmish line which advanced a mile and a half and pushed the Confederate skirmish line up the slope. A large force of Confederates was then seen on the hilltop, which was attacked by two regiments and Totten's battery and driven to the slope of the next hill.

Hot Fight In Cornfield.

Plummer's regulars became separated from the rest of the Union troops and crossed to the other side of the creek, where they suddenly faced a large body of Confederates in a cornfield. The fight here grew hot until one of the Union batteries, that under Du Bois, took position on a hill-top and opened so hot a fire on the enemy in the cornfield that Plummer was enabled to withdraw his men.

At this juncture the firing grew heavy at the other end of the line, where General Price attempted to turn Lyon's flank. The arrival of the Second Kansas frustrated this attempt, but Price's troops still charged several times only to be beaten back. Totten's Union battery had taken position on a nearby hill and helped to repulse the Confederates. This was one of the fiercest actions of the day, the firing becoming an unbroken roar.

An interval here ensued during which Price brought up fresh troops and started another attack all along the line. The Confederates charged many times and the lines reeled back and forth in a fierce struggle that lasted an hour. At this time Lyon's entire force was engaged. He had so few troops that he could spare none for a reserve. At last the Confederates temporarily gave way.

In the meantime Colonel Sigel had gained the rear of the enemy and began an attack from that side, driving in some scattering troops of the Confederates and following them for a long distance. At first he met little resistance. Sigel could hear the roar of Lyon's guns and expected the victorious Union troops soon to break through and join him. At this juncture General McCulloch's men advanced in considerable force, and Sigel thought them the Federal troops he had been anticipating. He therefore directed his men to withhold their fire until suddenly the supposed friends defeat him from personally leading this charge, swinging his hat and cheering on his men.

General Lyon's Death.
The charge succeeded in dislodging the foe and driving him back to the next ravine, but Lyon fell with a bullet to his left breast.

Nathaniel Lyon was perhaps the most promising general developed on the Union side during the first year of the war. He was born in Connecticut in 1818, graduated at West Point, served with distinction in the Seminole and Mexican wars, was in the early troubles in Kansas, where he wrote vigorous articles for the news papers, and at the beginning of the civil war was assigned to Missouri, where his career became one of increasing glory. It is not too much to say that General Lyon held Missouri in the Union and sealed the pact with his blood. His will left practically all his property, $30,000, to the cause of his country. He died unmarried.

The death of the general did not end the battle. The chief command now devolved on Major Sturgis, who knew Lyon's plans and continued the fight on these lines. For a half hour longer the engagement continued, when the Confederates once more gave way. It was only a lull, however. Suddenly they reappeared along the entire front and for the first time began an effective assault from a battery. The fight once more became general, the Confederates attempting to turn the Union right flank and assaulting Totten's battery at the center. The Federal line now stood like a wall of steel. Several times the enemy charged forward almost to the muzzles of the guns and as often were driven back.

At last Major Sturgis decided that he had too few troops to try to hold the field and determined to retire to Springfield and thence to Rolla. The Confederates admit that they were "glad to see him go." Nor did they attempt pursuit.

Losses on Both Sides Heavy.
The battle had lasted till 11 o'clock and for the number of men engaged and the length of time consumed one of the fiercest in the history of war. According to the Encyclopedia of that year, the losses were as follows: Union, 223 killed and 292 missing; Confederates, 517 killed, about 800 wounded and 30 missing. The battle of Wilson's Creek was even bloodier than the Battle of Bull Run, for at Bull Run loss was only 9 per cent of the force, while at Wilson's Creek it was 10 per cent and the Confederates lost 15 per cent of their force.