WAS SHE SELFISH?

Cupid Thought Not and Was Right.

By M. DIBBELL.

"The game isn't worth the candle," said Jocelyn dejectedly. "We positively can't live on in this way; the ends simply won't meet—I must go to work at something."
 "But what can you do, child?" queried her sister. "You have never learned anything but housekeeping well enough to teach it, and nobody wants lessons at that."
 "Well I might at least keep somebody's house."
 "Oh Jocelyn, is it not better to starve respectably than to go out as a common servant?"

"It certainly is not. I have a good healthy appetite every day of my life, and I intend to do my best to produce the three satisfactory meals which Providence intended me to have. Besides, a housekeeper is an important person nowadays—she oversees the doings of everybody else."
 "Where do you expect to find such a responsible position? They don't go begging?"

"Now my great secret shall be divulged," Jocelyn answered triumphantly. "I had a long talk with Mrs. Derment before she returned to the city this fall, and she quite approved of my idea. In her letter which came today she says that a dear friend of hers is in such poor health that she is no longer able to look after household affairs, but cannot bear to think of giving up her home. Mrs. Derment told her about me, and was authorized to make me a proposal. The salary is generous, and she is sure I will like Mrs. Norton. So can you suggest any reason why I should refuse such an offer?"

Miriam only gasped, as she gazed into the eager face of her energetic young sister.

"You dear old Miriam—you just can't help knowing that it is the very best thing on earth I could do. You can live here in peace and comfort and come over to see me if you get lonesome, I have kept the best part of it till the last—Mrs. Norton lives over on the highlands, only thirty minutes on the trolley."

 Relief succeeded dismay in Miriam's eyes. "That will be convenient to have you so near at hand. I was beginning to wonder how I could exist with you away off where I could never see you. You are a brave child, and I believe you could not help succeeding at whatever you undertook."

The week following, Jocelyn Newell started for home to her new home to assume her duties as its housekeeper. "Remember I shall come to see you every Thursday afternoon," she called back to Miriam, as the big suburban trolley started.

Jocelyn received a cordial welcome from Mrs. Norton who had taken a liking to her young housekeeper at their first meeting. "I am so glad that I am to have someone who can take charge of everything," she said with a relieved sigh. "Now I can rest in peace, and rest seems to be a perpetual demand with me nowadays."

"When you don't have anything to think about except how to get well and strong you will find yourself rested before you know it. I am going to see that you do get well—that is one of my duties as housekeeper," and Jocelyn's cheerful voice gave her employer a pleasant thrill.

Mrs. Norton was alone, and her ill health was largely the result of sorrow over the loss of both her husband and an only daughter. Her interest in life seemed dead, but the presence of her cheerful young housekeeper caused it to show faint but certain signs of life, and as the months passed she found that existence was not after all an entire blank.

The two women became fond of each other for the girl made valiant efforts to interest and amuse her employer; and great was her satisfaction when she saw in Mrs. Norton a marked improvement both in health and spirits.

The weekly visits to Miriam were faithfully paid, and the elder sister seemed cheerful and contented when they met; so it was a shock to Jocelyn when one day in late spring she received a call from Oliver Craig one of the favorite bachelors of her home village, and was severely taken to task by him for leaving her sister to die of loneliness.

When she tried to defend her action he waved aside her explanation, but his next words opened the mental eyes of his bewildered listener.

"The only way out of it is for Miriam to marry me. I have been wanting her to do it for ten years. I am not going to sit quietly and see her pine away before my eyes—I want you to tell Miriam that it is her duty to be my wife, not to keep a home for you as she has always insisted. You would be as dear as a sister to me and could have a home with us always if you would."

Jocelyn gave a little laugh. "You nearly scared me to death, but now I see through your deep laid scheme. You know I have always liked you, Oliver. Why didn't you ask me to help you before, instead of keeping your courting of Miriam secret all this time? To-morrow is my day for visiting, and I shall surely lay down the law to my dear old goose of a sister. She shall be happy, even if I have to force her into it."

"What a dumb-head I have been," remarked Oliver disgustedly. "I never did expect to see the subject for fear you would go into hysterics—Miriam was sure the mere suggestion would break your heart." He gave Jocelyn's hand a brotherly squeeze as he took his departure.

Jocelyn kept her word, and on the day following gave Miriam a severe lecture on her duty to the man who had loved her so long and waited for her so patiently. Before she left, a brother-in-law for herself had become an admitted possibility in the near future.

On returning to the Norton residence after this interview, its housekeeper found unusual signs of excitement.

"Oh, Miss Newell," was the greeting of Mary the parlor-maid, "Mrs. Norton's nephew has come, and they have been talking together over an hour. Mrs. Norton said put him in the blue room, and he would stay a long time she hoped."

"I am glad he has come, Mary; it will do Mrs. Norton good and we must make him comfortable," Jocelyn hastened to her room, feeling to her own surprise decidedly blue.

Removing her wraps, she threw a shawl about her shoulders and slipped out of doors. Mrs. Norton and her nephew were evidently settled for the evening, and a lonely feeling came over the young housekeeper as she heard their voices in passing.

After rambling for some time in the moonlight, Jocelyn seated herself on a bench by the boundary wall, and faced the situation. "What a selfish thing I am! Just because Miriam is to be made happy in spite of herself, and Mrs. Norton has the only person she has on earth left to love come to brighten her up, I fall into the dumps! It's a nice way of practicing the Golden Rule."

But this self directed lecture failed of its effect, for to Jocelyn's disgust she found herself sobbing softly. She rubbed the tears fiercely away.

"Why Miss Newell, what is the matter?" asked a sympathetic voice, as Jocelyn gave a final dab. She looked up with a start to find herself confronted by a tall young man, who continued, "Aunt Alma sent me to bring her treasured housekeeper in out of the dew, but she will be sorry I found you in tears. Can't I do something to help you?"

"No, for I am crying because I am the most selfish creature on earth," she answered. "Should you sympathize with some one who cried because she was going to have for a brother-in-law a man she had always liked?"

"I should sympathize with my aunt's perfect housekeeper whatever her trouble—she has told me all about you—but I am glad it is no worse."

"Mrs. Norton is the best woman that ever lived," Jocelyn rose as she spoke. "I must see that she is properly fixed for the night. Please don't tell her what a goose I have been."

"You need not fear that I will betray a confidence," he answered.

Eugene Ralston proved a great addition to the household, he carried both Mrs. Norton and her housekeeper off on all sorts of excursions. "I am a stranger and want to see the country," was his excuse, and Jocelyn silently blessed him as she saw the pink beginning to creep back into Mrs. Norton's cheeks.

Miriam was married to her patient Oliver in mid-summer, and the couple went for a short trip; but Jocelyn found that only joy for her sister filled her thought.

"I must be growing less selfish—I certainly hope so," she said to herself.

On the night of the wedding Eugene Ralston and Jocelyn strolled together. "It seems better to have a brother-in-law that you feared, doesn't it?" Eugene asked.

"I am delighted—I begin to hope that I am overcoming selfishness."
 "The idea of your being selfish—you don't know the meaning of the word."

Jocelyn laughed. "That only shows how little you know of the real me."

"I know that Aunt Alma found a new lease of life when she found you, and I know that when I found you I found the one woman in the world for me. Jocelyn will you marry me, and let me love you forever?"

Jocelyn's answer was peculiar, but entirely satisfactory to Eugene. "I thought I was overcoming selfishness, when it was only that I was learning to care for you—what an awful hypocrite I—!" But the hypocrites lips were sealed.

Yorkshire's Many Acres.

One often hears it stated that Yorkshire can boast more acres than there are letters in the Bible, and most people, on hearing the statement for the first time, are inclined to doubt its accuracy. It is perfectly true, however. Authorities differ as to the exact acreage of Yorkshire, one giving it as 3,882,848 acres, another as 3,771,843; but as the number of letters in the Bible, according to the most accurate computation, is only 3,576, it is evident that the letters with to spare—London TH-Bits
