HANDLING THE YOUNG BOAR.

Proper Feeding is the Big Factor in Causing Growth.

Young boars that are to be sold for breeding purposes need extra care. The buying public asks for males that are larger than their own pigs and that are in good flesh and pleasing to look upon.

Feeding is of course the big factor in securing growth, because the pigs are to be sold for more than regular market price a little more expensive feed may be used if it will secure

HANDY TYPE OF INDIVIDUAL HOG HOUSE.

The youngsters need an abundance of nutritious green feed. This keeps them healthy, gives them an appetite and causes them to take exercise. Clover and alfalfa are the most satisfactory, of course, but anything that is green and succulent will do. Skim milk is very nearly an ideal feed for growing pigs. There is nothing that is liked better, and it seems to make a growth of frame and muscle as no other feeds will do. Any hog man who can have an abundant supply of skim milk is fortunate indeed.

A thick slop made of mill shorts and a little alcohol does very nearly as well. Corn or corn and cooked barley are very acceptable for the basal part of the ration, it being always essential to furnish plenty of protein to balance the lack of it in corn and barley. Tankage and meat meal in the proportion of about one part to ten of corn or corn and barley will make up the deficiency nicely and will bring more rapid growth and more finish to the pigs. Very satisfactory feed is secured from the crops of any locality, it being necessary to balance it up with some protein concentrate only.

Of course the pigs will sell better if they are clean. They will thrive just as well if they have a cool, clean place as if they have a mud wallow, and it makes a vast amount of difference in selling to have them clean and sleek.—National Stockman and Farmer.

KEEP THEM ON THE FARM!

A large percentage of the young men who would leave the farm are those who grew up in an atmosphere of dissatisfaction and discontent with their farming parents. There is no question that the farmer—for health, wealth and happiness—holds a rare opportunity, but not until this opportunity is taken hold of will we become a race of successful farmers and permit perpetuity of a noble calling to the generations yet to come.—Kansas Farmer.

Asparagus Seeds.

An excellent plan to follow with asparagus is to visit the fields in the fall of the second year, when seed should be selected from plants of a few large stalks rather than many small ones. The seeds are ripe when the berries are well colored. After picking, the berries should be placed in any convenient tub, barrel or crock and allowed to soak until the pulp separates readily from the seed. This separation may be secured by washing with the hands. The seeds should be washed several times and then cured and stored.—Professor R. L. Watts, Pennsylvania State College.

When You Buy Wire Fencing.

Write to the leading fence manufacturer for their descriptive literature and read every bit they send you. When you go to buy, first find out what kind of wire is in it, what kind of galvanizing protects the wire, see that the points are immovable and have no projecting wire ends which injure stock, that the spacings are right for your purpose, and then, when all these points are settled, choose a heavy gauge wire.

Linseed Meal For Cattle.

Coarsely ground linseed meal of good quality has a feeding value slightly superior to old process cottonseed meal, and either of these feeds is better for supplementing corn for fattening cattle than wheat bran at current market values. This was proved in two experiments at the Nebraska station.
