> THE LUGGAGE SHOP ON THE SQUARE"

VICTIM OF HATRED

By J. H. GILMOUR.

A few miles from the confluence of east bank of the streams there stood, in the early eighties, a great country house called "The Zillah," which be longed to a white man. Its owner be longed to a family famous in the annals of Allahabad and all the surrounding district. They had been landed proprietors for many years and were one of the first to establish the manufacture of indigo in the northern part of India.

The holder of the property was, in the eighties, practically an outlaw. He was shunned by his own family for his many lawless acts, and he lived in that great weird house surrounded by natives of every caste and condition of life, and also by a few whites who had deserted from the army and sought the hospitality of a man who was hated and feared.

The man had received all the advantages of a generous education and of kinship with a well-known family. In his earlier days he had acquitted himself well in the dark time of the mutiny, having formed one of that small band of gentlemen that had kept the road open between Hattrass and

His troubles began with a lawsuit and he had a lawsuit to the day of his death. He had been driven from one possession to another till all that was left him was the "Zillah."

When the present king of England visited Allahabad, the owner of "The sent word to the authorities that he intended to present a petition in person to the prince, and would say things that would compel his royal highness to take notice of him, and then, perhaps, he would have justice meted out.

The man entered Allahabad with the following of the most disreputable men in his village and drove to where the prince was lodged. An army offi cer who was a friend of the family begged him to desist and prevailed on him to withdraw as his presence with that following was little short of trea

"Then give the German this paper," he said as he flung his petition to the officer and withdrew, swearing ven-geance at everybody. From that day he declared he owed no allegiance to England, and swore he would not pay another cent in taxes.

It was collected with the aid of the armed police.

Like men of his kind, brought up without any ideas of business, he was ever borrowing large sums at ruinous rates of interest, and whenever he was in need of ready cash he would put a mortgage on some theretofore unmortgaged piece of property.

The man who lent him the money was a native, and in the course of one of the trials the singular statement was elicited from this native that he vowed to ruin the white man if it took his entire fortune. He worked to this end for many years, and artfully led the unsuspecting victim into many a financial trap.

"A man like you," said the native to him one day, "is often in need of money, ready money. Why do you not come to your slave instead of going to the banks.

"You are no friend of mine," answered the white man. "It is your fault that you are not a friend. Do not I owe my life to your

"You do," was the reply, "but if you will remember it was I who wanted to blow you from a gun and I would have killed you with my own hands only I knew the temper of my father, and he would have himself delivered me over to the government after promising you your safety. "Let the past be the past," said the native. "I have come to you with offer of help for the sake of thy father and you begin to upbraid me.'

"Can I take help at the hands of a murderer of my people?" "My hands are clean," said the native humbly, "and the offer comes from

At last the man listened and turned to the native for aid. More than once he had been warned that he was going to his own undoing and that he would know that a native never forgets and never forgives, and that he was being more completely ruined than even he or his friends could real-

"I want the money and the men that can ruin me are not yet born." was all the answer he made.

Then began a series of foreclosures. One house went after another. The law was inexorable and the white man paid the penalty for his folly.

There was no respite for him. It was war with a vengeance and the legal war was driving the man to acts of outlawry. He met the native going into the courtroom, smiling and bland, and he thrashed him with his horsewhip till the poor wretch's flesh was in ribbons. For this act he served a short time in jail, not for the beating he administered, but for beating a man in the building of the law

When everything was taken from the man except "The Zillah," the law intervened.

And there he lived with outcasts, without a friend, shunned by his own family, feared by the natives and hated by the authorities-a victim of the revenge of Ram Lal, who, had he had his just deserts, would have been blown from a gun as a traitor.

growing of hogs for slaughter a source of profit unless proper grazing and feeding methods are followed.

In the spring, summer and fall there are many crops for pasturing hogs, but during the winter the crops to select from are limited. On almost every farm the production and keeping of hogs in winter is expensive, and generally it is not profitable for the pho township, a tract of 12 acres of reason that large quantities of corn gravel land are fed without products of green crops. More winter grazing is needed, for which many crops are adapted. The most reliable are, however, rape, rye, oats, wheat and barley.

The seeding should be heavy to insure a thorough planting. The young plants will grow slowly in the winter and many plants will be needed to furnish plenty of pasture. Crimson clover will do well with rape, rye, oats, wheat and barley, and will mean an improvement on the land.

est and Quickest Method-Few Crops Sold.

Where lands have been "cropped to death," as some plain people aptly term it, live stock farming is the surest, cheapest and quickest method of restoring its fertility. In live stock farming the crops raised on the farm are grown primarily for the purpose of feeding one or more classes of live stock, and but little is sold except animal products. On the other hand, concentrated feeding stuffs are purchased for feeding the farm animals, which adds to the amount of fertilty returned to the land in manure. Since the animal products sold do not, as a general rule, contain large quantities of fertilizing ingredients, it is easy to rapidly increase the fertility of land

Streams Fine for Trout

Orders for the resumption of the distribution of trout from the state fish hatcheries were issued on Satirday by N. R. Buller, state commissioner of Fisheries, following receipt of reports that conditions of streams were improving.

Some days ago it was found that some creeks and brooks for which RESTORE FERTILITY OF LAND trout had been asked were so shallow because of lack of rainfall, that Live Stock Farming is Surest, Cheap- it was not advisable to put out the vearling fish.

Since that time rains have bettered conditions, and trout are being shipped at the rate of more than 1,000 a day from Bellefonte, and at the same rate from Corry. All fish shipped are a year old, it is stated.

Price of Sugar

The price of sugar is creating considerable talk these days. Some people think sugar was never so high in price, but they are mistaken. In 1870 sugar sold at 14c per pound; in '71 at 13½c; in '72 and '73 at 12½c; in 1874 at 13c; in '76 and '78 it sold at 11c and in 1879 at 12½c. In 1913 sugar sold at just 43c and this was the lowest figure. Today the price ranges from 8 to 10
