Left Arm Crushed

Henry Strickler's Left Arm Crushed Beneath Falling Phone Pole

Following is a clipping from a Kansas paper:

"Henry Strickler, a lineman for the United Telephone Company, sustained a broken left arm and a severe cut over one eye, as well as numerous bruises, as a result of a bad fall Monday while he was working on a phone pole about seven miles south of town. The linemen were fixing a new 'corner' as it is called, and a new pole had been set in the ground. Instead of climbing up the new pole Strickler went up the old pole, which had only a couple of wires and one guy on it. Strickler strapped himself about the pole and started to work. The pole tottered and broke off underground, throwing the pole on top of Strickler. His face was bruised and a severe gash was made over one eye, requiring five stitches to close the wound. His left arm was caught under the cross bar, the bone broken and shoved clear out of position by the force of the fall and the weight of the pole. He was brought into town to the C. S. Kraybill home, where he had been staying."

Mr. Strickler is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Strickler of near town, and went West in the Spring.
