A Trip to the Pacific Coast

and fall suits would be more comfortable. I came into the State from the south, by way of the Santa Fe Railroad. When one has been journeying for days thru the treeless deserts of New Mexico, it is certainly a cheering sight to see the cultivated fields and fresh green orange groves of Redlands and Riverside. The beautiful effect is entirely due to irrigation. It seldom rains here, but the farmers and fruit-growers, by means of their irrigation ditches, have put the water just where they want it. The result is luxuriance that is simply marvelous. Not only the trees and vineyards grow as if by magic, but flowers are found everywhere in the greatest profusion—clambering up trellises and over houses and spreading widely and rankly about in garden beds. Californians are very proud of their state. Wherever you go you hear them boasting about it. They always end up by saying: "When you get tired of the East, I know you will come out here." When the Easterner objects and defends his native place, they smile playfully as though he had not yet become fully acquainted with God's paradise.

From Riverside our party wended its way to San Diego and Los Angeles. The San Diego fair is really a credit to the community. It has many interesting exhibits especially along the lines of Indian work and the early cliff dwellers. I was also greatly attracted by a magnificent exhibit on anthropology or the science of man. While San Francisco, of course, has the larger exposition, the one at San Diego not to be despised. It has a beauty, an atmosphere, a coloring, all its own.

One of the most interesting experiences that came to me at San Diego, was a trip to Tia Juana, Mexico. We left San Diego in hisopower automobiles shortly after breakfast and arrived at about 10:30, passing the international boundary line on the way. Never did I feel so glad that I was a citizen of the U. S. as I did that day. The main street of the town is lined with saloons, gambling dens and low dives of all sorts. None of the people look very promising. Every Sunday they have a bull fight. Sometimes the matador kills the bull, sometimes the bull kills the matador but it doesn't seem to make much difference to the people either way. Each gambling house pays Villa $500 per month for the privilege of doing business. There is a Casino there which attracts a crowd and I am sorry to say most of the patrons are Americans. No Mexican money is accepted. The Mexicans seem to have no confidence in their own country when it comes to accepting the currency. American money passes everywhere.

From San Diego we took the beautiful ride up the coast to Los Angeles. The Pacific, which really belies its name, lay to our left, while to the right coasted the whole of a grove of orange trees, lemon trees, cultivated fields and vineyards. California is certainly the farmer's paradise. Crops seem to grow with very little effort. Only give them irrigation and soon the whole of the side rejoices and blossoms as the rose. Los Angeles itself is a modern, up-to-date hustling city. I was most of all impressed with its clean streets and magnificent business places. It is giving San Francisco a sharp race for first place on the Pacific Coast, especially since the earthquake and fire. For my part I preferred Los Angeles to San Francisco. It is easier to find your way around the city, the streets are wider and more direct, and the people seem more agreeable and hospitable. Los Angeles was crowded with "Elks" at the time of our visit and right behind them came the "Shriners." The hotels were simply jammed full and if we had not had reservations, it would have been difficult to have secured accommodations.

Just outside of Los Angeles is the Pasadena ostrich farm, at which place ostrich plumes are raised for the market. Here they feed the ostriches oranges as an object of interest to the tourists. It is most curious to see an ostrich swallowing an orange whole. It makes such a queer lump in the neck as it goes down his throat. Yet an ostrich will eat orange after orange in this way with no apparent discomfort.

Another side trip from Los Angeles is that to the Catalina Islands. This has often been called the fisherman's paradise. Great tuna and sea-bass are caught here and the swordfish gives the game fisherman a hard fight for his money. Santa Catalina Island lies about 35 miles from the Pacific coast in the San Joaquin Valley. Here the party leaves the train and enters 60-horsepower automobiles for a trip of 67 miles to Wawona, on the edge of the Yosemite. Wawona has a fine, friendly little hotel where a stop of two days is made in order to give time for a visit to the Mariposa Grove of big trees. No one going to the Yosemite should miss that sight. Towering into the air 300 feet, and in girth from 150 to 200 feet, is the oldest group of big trees in the world. The Grizzly Giant has withstood the storms of 8000 winters. Before the time of Noah, that tree was already in existence. If one should ask how we can know that the answer is, by the number of Rings the tree contains. 8000 is a conservative estimate. We took lunch under the trees at the hunter's cabin, then walked around and admired those mighty patriarchs of the forest. Some are named after the great American generals, Grant, Sherman and Sheridan. Some are named after the poets. Whittier, Longfellow, Emerson, but most are named after the States of the Union. It was a delightful day, one long to be remembered.

But if the Big Trees were interesting, what shall I say of the Yosemite itself? It is simply entrancing. We started from Wawona Hotel early in the morning along a road beautiful in the extreme. On both sides it is lined with a virgin forest of pine and fir and spruce, interspersed with rivulets and waterfalls. About half way along this road, one comes to the entrance of the Park. The road begins to descend, along high cliffs and dangerous curves. Finally we come to Inspiration Point, where the first view of the Valley bursts upon our entranced vision. That panorama is certainly one of the most inspiring sights in the world. In front towers El Capitan 3000 feet, to the left the Three Brothers and Half Dome fully as high, if not higher, rise into the air. To the right the beautiful Bridal Veil Falls, its narrow thread of silver shimmering down into the valley 2000 feet below. No wonder every artist wants to paint the Yosemite Valley from Inspiration Point. All nature lovers agree that it gives one of the most adequate ideas of the beauty and sublimity of the whole scene that can be found anywhere. But now we descend to the floor of the Valley, which seems absolutely level, as though some great cataclysm had split apart the mountains and left the floor one or two miles wide between. From below, the mountains look higher and more towering than from above. To the left, one now sees Yosemite Falls, descending 3200 feet to the abyss below, the highest falls in the world.

It is said enough to give you some idea, however inadequate, of the Yosemite. I must hurry on to the Exposition in San Francisco. It is doubtful if anywhere in the world could be found a site which surpasses the Exposition site in scenic beauty and natural advantages. Lying just inside the Golden Gate, it fronts to the north, along San Francisco Bay. The grounds are about 3 miles long by half a mile wide. On one side is the reservation, the U. S. government reservation, and on the other the wharves and docks of the harbor. On all sides magnificent mountain and marine views are to be seen. In this setting that makes the Exposition so attractive. Not even in Italy, have I experienced such pleasure from the beautiful marine views as here.

And then as to the Exposition itself. Immense buildings, any one of which is larger than the largest convention hall you have ever seen, flanked at both ends by two more—the palace of machinery and the palace of fine arts and intersected and bisected by beautiful courts and avenues, and you will begin to have some idea of the core of the Exposition. Then at one end, think of the 29 buildings of the foreign governments, arranged in the shape of a semi-circle, and 36 buildings of the various states of the Union arranged along the water front and you have the second division of the Exposition. But this is not all. Beyond the state buildings are the stock yards and poultry exhibits and at the other end of the Exposition grounds one finds the buildings of the concessions, where side shows and scenic attractions of all kinds, are stretched along a "zone" called "The Zone."

Yet these are the mere bones of the Exposition. The total effect is simply indescribable. There is a general color scheme running thru all, the dominant colors being blue and green and gold. And then the riot of color in the flowers of the gardens and the beautiful sculptures and magnificent fountains make this a sight like fairy-land. One could simply stand and gaze for hours in wonder and admiration. I will confess it was the external aspect of the Exposition that impressed me more than the exhibits. But these are by no means to be despised. Especially where they were arranged in tasteful and natural surroundings did they make a deep impression on all who saw them. The exhibits of Canada were very notable in this particular. They were arranged in the shape of a panorama, showing certain sections of the country, with the grain growing and the animals running, towns and cities along the banks of rivers and all lighted up by yellow electric simulates sunlight. I predict that in expositions of the future, there will be a great deal more of this done. The immense interest shown in the few experiments I saw is just one more point that I wish to mention and that is the illumination at night. In former expositions the lights have all been visible. In this exposition the source of the light was never seen. The buildings were all illuminated indirectly, so that a soft even luminescence was diffused everywhere, with none of the glaring glare so painful to the eyes. The courts were especially beautiful at night. The facades of the columns and the groups of statuary were brought out so clearly that they were even more interesting than in the day time.

Besides this great scintillators and search lights were made to play upon the towers of Jewels. The effect was simply marvelous. It was as though thousands of diamonds were flashing in the sky, interspersed with rubies and emeralds. Never shall I forget that sight. The scintillators are mechanical contrivances by which all the colors of the rainbow are thrown upon the sky, like some enormous aurora borealis. The sensation when one sees this extending clear across the harbor is simply awestruck.

In conclusion, let me say that a trip to California and the Pacific Coast is a wonderful eye-opener to any one who takes it. The educational value of travel has long been recognized. In no place will it be appreciated to so great an extent than in California. The hills and valleys, the magnificent scenery, the wonderful fertility, the fine climate make it a veritable fairyland to one who has never seen anything like it before. It is not an over-populated country. There is plenty of room for development and lots of business opportunities. But behind it all, there is always the danger of earthquakes, which may destroy the fruit of your labor at any moment. In the east, we may not have so many natural advantages and such exceeding fertility, but we have a surer harvest, less danger from unforeseen catastrophes and a most beautiful scenery. If we will but open our eyes to see it, Pennsylvania is a good old state after all, and although we do not say so much about it, we have just as much reason to be proud of Lancaster county, as the inhabitants of the different counties of California, have of theirs.

The Donovan August Furniture Sale merits the keen attention of everyone interested in the purchase of Furniture, because it offers high-class merchandise at the lowest prices in many, many years.

The Furniture offered in the August Sale is of the same durable, reliable standard that has made Donovan's a safe store to buy in. Don't gamble in Furniture of unknown reputation; it may be the most expensive bargain you ever got.

It's as easy as "rolling off a log" for us to undersell all the specialty Furniture Stores in town. We do it all the year around—but in August we undersell them by so big a margin that it's a joke.

We have thirty other departments in this store each one of which helps to pay the rent, light and all the other unavoidable expense of doing business. In a specialty store, the poor old furniture has to stand the whole gaff. Imagine the profit some of the stores in town must get on the Furniture they sell. Gee, Whiz! It's a Crime!

Every Furniture Store in Town, Except Donovan's, sells Furniture on credit, installment, "Dollar-a-Week" or any old way—just so they make a sale. You know how many these dollars are never collected. Imagine the expense of running that kind of a business. Who pays for it? You do, if you buy goods there for cash.

These are only some of the reasons why we can undersell our "Competitors" in Lancaster. There are others that for trade reasons we withhold. For the August Furniture Sale, we make months of careful preparations. We give manufacturers their own time to make the goods. We buy in big quantities. We get spot-cash concessions. Then, in order to keep our big organization busy in an otherwise dull month such as August, we cut our regular profit in two and sell furniture for much less than our regular low prices.
