Plans To Make Military And Naval Training Compulsory

DRAFT POWER FOR GOVERNOR

In All Institutions of Learning in This Commonwealth Every Pupil Over the Age of Twelve Years Would Be Trained, If Bill is Passed.

Harrisburg. — Representatives Thomas F. McNichol and William T. Brady, of Philadelphia, introduced drastic bills in the House, providing for compulsory military or naval training or instruction of all boys more than twelve years old, and giving the Governor the right to draft citizens from the National Guard or naval militia.

The McNichol bill provides that for the purpose of maintaining the National Guard and naval militia at the standard of efficiency required for public safety the Governor may at any time call for volunteers or order that a draft be made to make up the complement of the National Guard or naval militia.

The act provides that the Governor shall direct his order to the mayor of any city, or burgess of any borough or town, specifying the number of men required, and mayors or burgesses shall draft the number of men specified, or they may accept as volunteers as many as are required by the Governor.

The Brady measure provides that in all public, parochial and private schools, seminaries, colleges and universities, and all institutions of learning in this Commonwealth, every pupil over the age of twelve years shall be required to undergo military instruction and training for one-half day during each week of every school term, unless physically disqualified.

These instructors must have passed an examination before the Board of Military Instruction, and the board shall arrange encampments during the months of June, July and August which shall be attended by the pupils of the schools and colleges. The encampments shall each last a week and the expenses shall be borne by the State.

It provides for an increase in the salaries of County Commissioners and grants the right of appeal to Court when licenses are refused. WASHINGTON

What figure more immovably august Than that great strength so patient and so pure, Calm in good fortune, when it wavered, sure, That mind serene, impermeably just, Modelled on classic lines so simple they endure?

That soul so softly radiant and so white The track it left seems less of fire than light, And if pure light, as some deem, be the force That drives revolving planets on their course, Why for his power benign seek an impurer source?

His waste the true enthusiasm that burns long, Domestically bright, Red from itself and shy of human sight, The hidden force that makes a lifetime strong, And ends the short-lived feud of a song.

Passions, say you? What is passion for But to subsume our natures and control To front heroic toils with late returns, Or none, or such as shames the conqueror? Not fenced by duty, but unconsciously, And not with holiday stubble, that could burn.

Unrejoiced of men who after bonfires run, Through seven slow years of unadvancing years, Equal when fields were lost or fields were won, With breadth of popular applause or blame, Never schooled through show of present good By other than unsetting lights to steer.

New-trimmed in Heaven, nor than his steadfast form, More steadfast, far from rashness as from rigid, but with himself first, grasping still In sweetest poise the wave-beat helm of will.

Not honored then or now because he wooed The popular voice, but that he self-withstood; Broad-minded, high-souled, there is but one Who was all this and ours, and all men's, Washington.

—James Russell Lowell.

FAMED OLD CHURCH

A FEW months ago there was celebrated the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the completion and opening of St. Paul's chapel in Trinity parish, in the days when Britain still ruled New York, and Trinity parish was an integral part of the established church of England.

Trinity's first outlying chapel, built in 1752, and called St. George's, stood at the corner of Cliff and Bedlam streets. It was in November, 1763, that the vestry voted the erection of a second chapel in the parish, to be situated on Broadway, at the corner of "Partition street," now Fulton, near "The Common," the meeting place, first for British and then for American assemblies in the town. Here George III was denounced and the Stamp act resisted in fiery speeches, and here a year later Alexander Hamilton, at the age of seventeen, thrilled thousands with his patriotic eloquence.

It may not be generally known that St. Paul's had originally, besides the main entrance at the Hudson river end of the church, north and south doors, on each side of the church, with entrance porches. They were subsequently stoned up, and canopied pews erected in their places. One of these pews was reserved for President Washington, the other for the governor. It is said that after Trinity church was burned and St. Paul's became the principal church of the city, the north door was closed first and a canopy, elevated and fitted up and decorated for the king's representative and vicerey, the governor of the province.

"The facts," Dr. Morgan Dix said, "which I have gathered show that Washington sat, at different times, on each side of the church; on the north side, in the place of the royal Governor, until a new place was provided, and then for a short time on the south; because after the rebuilding of St. Paul's chapel, the north door was closed first and a canopy, elevated and fitted up and decorated for the king's representative and vicerey, the governor of the province.
