FARMERS' COLUMN

Items in These Columns Are Prepared in the Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C., and are Reliable and Trustworthy

With the approach of cold weather the thrifty farmer in almost any section of the country soon can undertake some form of fur trapping with profit. A knowledge of the fur-bearing animals found in his vicinity and how to catch them is of income often overlooked. For the boy in the country nothing offers a more delightful diversion than a trapping expedition, particularly if it entails a money reward. Where the farm itself affords little opportunity for trapping, an accessible stream or wooded tract is generally to be found near-by where fur-bearing animals can be caught. While the fur resources of the country have been diminishing steadily, prices have been rising. The war also has been an important factor in this upward trend.

WAIT UNTIL FUR IS RIGHT

The person about to engage in pelt gathering must understand at the outset the necessity of postponing trapping until the animals' fur is at its best. The pelt of a mink for example killed in September might not be worth more than 50 cents, whereas if the same animal were killed in November or December, its pelt might bring $10. Speaking generally, trapping should not begin until cold weather has set in—that is, until late November or December for most sections of the country. Two principal exceptions to the rule are the muskrat and beaver, whose fur is not at its best until February or March.

In addition to the widely distributed fur-bearing animals mentioned below each region has many others to lure the pelt collector. The prices given here are necessarily only approximations. Each trapper must bear in mind that the size and condition of the individual pelt, as well as other factors, will have much to do with the sum it will bring.

SKUNK PELTS VALUABLE

The skunk, one of the most common fur bearers, is found in every State of the Union. Large skunk skins probably will bring the trapper from $1 to $5 this season, while the pelts of the little spotted skunk will bring from 10 to 80 cents. The weasels, of one variety or another, is to be found in practically all sections of the country. Formerly the brown pelts were considered worthless, but with the rise in fur prices brown pelts should net the trapper from 10 to 25 cents each, while the white pelts will bring from 50 to $1.50.

An animal not to be found in large numbers, but native to regions north, south, east and west, is the mink. When in prime condition its skin, if secured in the north should bring from $4 to $8, while a skin secured in the south should command $2 to $3. Likewise, the raccoon living in the north produces a better pelt than the one living in the south. Good raccoon skins are worth from $1.50 to $3.75 each to the trapper.

Many persons, particularly city dwellers, may be surprised to learn that many foxes are trapped in this country. Red fox pelts, obtainable in widely distributed areas in the Northern States, should bring from $10 to $30 each this season, while the gray fox found in the Southern States will bring from $1.50 to $3 a pelt.

An example of returns that can be secured from fur resources long overlooked is found in the fact that the people of Oregon netted approximately $50,000 from mole skins last year, following trapping demonstrations by representatives of the Biological Survey of the United States Department of Agriculture.

The demonstrations showed that while millions of European mole skins were used by fur manufacturers in America before the war, the skins of some American moles, especially the large, common variety of western Washington and Oregon, are larger and have better texture than those from Europe. Farmers' Bulletin 832, published by the United States Department of Agriculture, describes the best kinds of mole traps, how to set them, and gives other information. The methods are especially adapted to the Pacific Coast States, but with modifications will apply to all localities where moles are found.

MUSKRATS STILL NUMEROUS

While minks, raccoons and skunks have become somewhat scarce in certain localities, muskrats have not diminished in numbers except in places where the marshes have been drained. These animals multiply much more rapidly than many other fur bearers, and their habits are better fitted to maintain their numbers under reasonable protection. Muskrat pelts this season should bring from 75 cents to $2 each. Though the price of cotton-tail rabbit skins is low—15 cents to 35 cents a pound for ridged skins—this source of income should not be overlooked by the trapper-farmer, as frequently a large number of these animals can be caught in the course of the winter. There is frequently a good market for rabbit meat also. Among fur-bearing animals more or less widely distributed throughout the country are opossums, badgers, and the western regions, coyotes and wolves.

If the farmer who temporarily turns trapper is to realize the best prices for pelts, he must learn the proper methods of handling them. Most skins should be "cased" for the market. A cased skin is one removed from the carcass after slitting the hind legs but not the belly of the animal, thereby leaving a tubular-shaped pelt. The skin is left with the turned in, and dried on a stretcher made of thin board sharpened to a point, or of heavy galvanized wire. The Biological Survey of the U. S. Department of Agriculture furnishes on application information regarding

UNDERTAKING AND EMBALMING

BRUNNER MOUNT JOY, PA.

The Whole Secret of A Better Tire

Simply a Matter of the Maker's Policies

This you will realize—once you try a Brunswick—a super-tire is possible only when the name certifies that the maker is following the highest standards.

For tire making is chiefly a matter of standards and policies—cost plus care. Any maker can build a good tire if he cares to pay perfection's price.

All men know Brunswick standards, for Brunswick products have been famous for 74 years.

Formulas, fabrics and standards vary vastly in cost. Reinforcements, plies and thickness are a matter of expense. And these variations affect endurance. It rests with the maker how far he wishes to go—how much he can afford to give.

For there are no secrets nor patents to hold one back.

To ascertain what each maker offers one must analyze and test some 200 tires—as our laboratories have done.

Then it is a matter of combining the best features and building according to the highest standards.

Once you try a Brunswick you will understand how we have built model tires, regardless of factory expense.

Yet Brunswick Tires cost you the same as other like-type tires. Our saving is on selling cost, through our nation-wide organization.

We realize that you expect more from Brunswicks, and we assure you that you get it. ONE Brunswick will tell you the story.

And then you'll want ALL Brunswicks. No other tire, you'll agree, gives so much for your money.
