After being in session at Hershey for more than a week the annual conference of the Church of the Brethren adjourned at noon Wednesday. The conference has been called "the most successful in the history of the denomination."

Refusal to put further bans on styles of clothing to be worn.

Refusal to provide a liturgy or set forms for the services.

Consideration of the establishment of a large university.

The appointment of a committee to prepare plans for the establishment of a large hospital and training school for nurses.

The conference was attended by 525 official delegates from congregations, and by fifty-five of the standing committee, in addition to thousands of visitors. On no day are the visitors said to have numbered fewer than 5,000 and on Sunday they are reported to have numbered more than 40,000.

Trouble was experienced in feeding the large crowds, especially on Sunday, when 840 gallons of ice cream were needed to furnish desert at the meals. The cafeteria reports having used on an average eighty-five dozen eggs and 100 pounds of beefsteak for breakfast each day. It fed only a comparatively small part of the crowd.
