POINTERS FOR THE BACK-YARD POULTEMAN

Keep the hens confined to your own land.
Don't keep a rooster. Hens lay just as well without a male bird.
Don't overstock your land.
Purchase well-matured pullets rather than hens.
Don't expect great success in hatching and raising chicks unless you have had some experience, and have a grass plot separate from the yard for the hens.
Build a cheap house or shelter. Make the house dry and free from drafts, but allow for ventilation.
Fowls stand cold better than dampness. you can build a good henhouse with two piano boxes, the backs taken off, set back to back. Small windows, screened for summer, and provided with glass or cloth for winter, should be provided. It is wise, also, to have these boxes raised off the ground a few inches to prevent rats making their homes under the house. This kind of house should do for 25 hens.
Keep your house and yard clean. Provide roosts and drooping boards.
Save the manure. It is worth money if treated properly.
Provide a nest for each four or five hens.
Grow some green crop in the yard. Spade up the yard frequently.
Feed scraps and kitchen wastes.
Feed grain once or twice a day. Feed a dry mash.
Keep hens free from lice and the house free from mites.
Kill and eat the poorest hens in the fall when they begin to molt and cease to lay.
Preserve the surplus eggs produced during the summer for use during the fall and winter when eggs are scarce and high in price.
The size of the flock which can be kept most efficiently will depend upon the space available and upon the amount of table scraps and other waste available for feed. It is a mistake to overstock your land. Better results will be obtained from a few hens in a small yard than from a large number. The back-yard flock rarely should consist of more than 20 or 25 hens, and often of not more than 8 to 10. For 20 or 25 hens you should have a yard 25 by 30 feet in size.

THE PRODUCE AND LIVE STOCK MARKET

CORRECT INFORMATION FURNISHED WEEKLY BY THE PENNA. BUREAU OF MARKETS FOR THE BULLETIN

Herewith is a corrected weekly report of the Lancaster markets relative to produce and live stock:

FARM VALUES AFFECTED BY CHANGES IN TYPE OF FARMING

Many farmers, before buying a farm, have saved themselves future losses by looking well into the matter of a probable change in the type of farming practiced in the region they have under consideration. Certain crops cease to be profitable, owing to the development of other regions more favorably situated for their production and marketing. Some crops may have to be abandoned because of disease, insect pests, or other causes. The United States Department of Agriculture suggests the test question: Is the farm selected adapted to such possible changes?

For instance, the farm selected may now be growing beans, potatoes, corn, oats, clover, and hay, with the prospect that beans and potatoes will soon cease to be profitable. The question then arises—can some other crops or crop be found to replace them. Very few regions have a wide range of crops, especially in general farming, and adaptability to new crops is a very important consideration.

Can the beef-cattle farm be made over into a dairy farm? Can the dairy farm be made into a sheep farm? Can the fruit farm be made into a hay, grain, or live-stock farm? In many instances it will be found that the farm in question demands a type of farming that can not be easily changed to meet the needs of changing conditions.

When making a selection, look back and follow the local economic changes that have occurred in the last 30 years, and then judge for yourself whether the farm you have chosen is adapted to the adaptability necessary for meeting the changes that are bound to come in the future.
