Francis X. Schlegelmilch Death claimed Francis Xavier Schlegelmilch, at the Columbia hospital, on Friday night, about midnight, where he had gone for treatment on Monday last. His death was due to a complication of diseases. Born in Marietta, a son of the late Francis Xavier and Elizabeth Schlegelmilch, February 2, 1855, he was in his sixty-fifth year, and received his education in the public schools of Marietta. He was always fond of studying and reading when a young man. He was ticket and freight agent at Watts for many years, and when that station was abandoned he was transferred to Marietta, which position he held at the time of his death, making a total of thirty-five years as an employee of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. He is survived by his widow, who was Miss Anna Cleary, of Donegal, Ireland, and the following children: Francis Xavier, Jr., Miss Elizabeth, harpist, Misses Anna, and Isabel, and James, all of Marietta. There are no sisters or brothers, he being the last of his family. The funeral was held on Tuesday morning.

HUNTING SUBSTITUTES FOR THE POPLAR SHADE TREE

The spread of the poplar canker in the eastern states has made the favorite type of this tree unsatisfactory for shade and ornamental purposes. Through rigid inspection of affected nursery stock, the nursery inspection service of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture has tried to keep the disease in check but it is now so widespread that nurseries are seeking resistant varieties and also developing other types of shade and ornamental trees to replace the once much-planted poplar varieties.

The fungus causing poplar canker was introduced in nursery stock from Europe more than thirty years ago. Since that time it has spread over the entire northeastern section of the country and has killed or disfigured millions of poplar trees, according to the specialists of the Bureau of Plant Industry. Owing to the fact that the fungus affects trees which are not of much value as timber and are used largely for shade or ornamental purposes, the poplar canker has never been brought to the attention of the public with the same force as has the chestnut blight and the white pine blight. Yet it is almost as destructive to its host as the well-known chestnut blight, for even though it kills the poplar very slowly and uncertainly, it disfigures to such an extent that after a year or two it ceases to be of beauty or value.

Like the chestnut blight organism the canker fungus produces cankers or dead areas in the bark and in time girdles and kills the affected branch. The ragged appearance of so many of our eastern rows of Lombardy poplar is due almost entirely to this fungus, introduced in the young trees or spread by wind from other affected poplars.

Nurseries eventually expect to develop pyramidal types of sugar maple, English oak, tulip tree, ginkgo and Katsura tree, to replace the picturesque, pyramidal forms of poplar, such as the Lombardy. To replace the more bushy types of poplar, sugar maple, Norway maple and sycamore may be used to advantage.

COAST GUARD ICE PATROL REPORTS TO WEATHER BUREAU

Daily reports are received by the Weather Bureau, United States Department of Agriculture, from the ice-patrol service, which has been maintained for the last 10 years by the United States Coast Guard in the North Atlantic Ocean. In addition to its scouting duty along the steamer lines, scientific observations are made and reported to the Weather Bureau by the ice-patrol service. The ice patrol was established soon after the Titanic disaster. April 14, 1912, when that ship was sunk by striking an iceberg off the tail of the Grand Banks of Newfoundland. Conditions in respect to ice are subject to much variations from year to year. Some years bring large quantities of ice to this region; other years bring scarcely any. In some years the ice is held in high latitudes; in others it drifts far south, and constitutes a serious menace to transatlantic steamers. As the bergs vary considerably in location as well as in season, a vessel might sail on a course that was reported clear at the time of her departure, but later collide with ice which had drifted into her path, as in the case of the Titanic.

The object of the ice-patrol work is, first, to determine the variable limiting lines of dangerous ice and disseminate such information for the guidance of shipping; second, to make oceanographic and meteorological observations which are of value in increasing general knowledge of the ocean. A continuous patrol is maintained by ten United States Coast Guard cutters capable of keeping at sea in all kinds of weather. Each is alternately on duty for two weeks' period, searching the area south of latitude 43 degrees for signs of ice, and broadcasting information to all approaching ships and to the Weather Bureau.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT MAKES ADDED USE OF RADIO

The Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture, making further use of the excellent broadcasting facilities offered by WBAK, the State Police radio station at Harrisburg, has recently expanded its service to the public by supplementing the daily report to the Bureau of Markets with short, interesting talks on agricultural topics. A tentative schedule of programs has been arranged and Tuesday and Thursday evenings selected as the regular broadcasting periods for the present. The time observed in the initial programs, 5:45 P. M., eastern standard time, will continue in effect until it is found that an earlier or a later hour is better suited to the radio farmer. Station WBAK operates on a 400 meter wave length. The value of the radio as a quick means of communicating with farmers when crops are endangered, or as an agency for scattering other helpful information when it will be of greatest benefit to the grower, has been amply demonstrated to state agricultural officials during the past year. It is now almost a year since the Pennsylvania Bureau of Markets broadcast its first daily report on the current livestock and produce quotations of the principal marketing centers. These reports have given the producers a knowledge of marketing conditions that has been of untold value to them in the sale of their products. It is the aim of the department to add to the benefits derived by the farmer from his radio outfit, by discussing such topics as the control of diseases and insect pests attacking crops, trees and flowering plants, the necessity for quarantines and other regulations, the value of nursery inspection in protecting the plant grower's interest, and similarly well timed talks. Coming programs include: "The Use of Spreaders and Stickers in Spray Materials, Thursday, June 14; "Checking the Disease and Insect Enemies of the Rose," Tuesday, June 19.

State Agriculture Dept. Radio Talks (Following Daily Market Report) 5:45 P. M. Eastern Standard Time, State Police Radio Station W B A K, Harrisburg, Penna. Thursday, June 28—"Will We Lose Our Chestnut Trees." They call it strawberry shortcake because it doesn't last long.
