Mt. Joy Garden Model For State

(From Page 1.) Early spinach, lettuce, turnips and other early maturing crops have been removed; this space is now filled with kohlrabi, rutabagas, New Zealand spinach, swiss chard, head and cos lettuce and Witlof chicory. Both early and late celery is grown, and cauliflower, egg plants, peppers, parsley, salsify, parsnips and horse radish are not neglected.

With all these crops, the garden is not large enough to satisfy the demands of the family, and snap beans, navy beans, squashes, sweet corn and okra are planted between the rows of trees in a young orchard. Planting is not completed for the season on this Lancaster county garden, and additional short season vegetables will replace those removed, up to the middle of August.

The garden is so planted that little hand hoeing is necessary. Long, straight rows permit the use of the wheel hoe, although the limited space requires close planting and prohibits the use of a horse cultivator. Heavy fertilization has hastened the growth of the crops and has given quality products as well as heavy yields. Through dusting and other methods, insect pests and diseases have been eliminated from the garden.

ARRESTED AT BILLMEYER; DESTROYED THE EVIDENCE

Peter Huss, who gave his address as Middletown R. D. No. 1, was arrested at Billmeyer Saturday evening by Constable Hebbe and taken to Columbia for a hearing before Justice McCracken.

The officer alleged that Huss, who was traveling in an automobile, who arrived at Billmeyer only a short time before his arrest, was giving the men employed at the Baker quarries a sample of liquid from a bottle. Believing the liquid was liquor and that the sample drinks were given with the intention of taking orders for some of the goods the officer walked to the car. Before he reached the machine Huss is alleged to have smashed the bottle spilling the contents on the ground, thus destroying what evidence the constable might have secured to bring a charge of violating the liquor law.

After Huss was taken to Columbia charges of trespass and disorderly conduct were brought against him. He spent the night in the station house and Sunday morning his father and a brother went to Columbia and had the young man
