

DAIRYING - AT HOME AND ABROAD

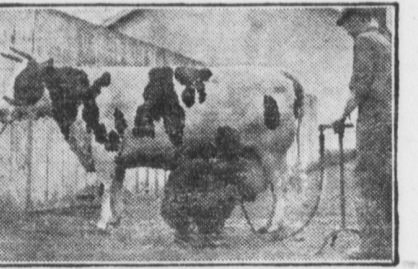

Amsterdam, Holland
Thousands of tons of Dutch cheese are consumed annually. A big percentage is exported. Holland is one of the most progressive dairy countries, also considered, in the world. The most intensive and scientific methods are practiced. Cow testing associations are numerous.

Chile, South America
A South American Milkman
This picture was taken at a small dairy on the island of Chile. A can of milk along with either side of a milk or some other native food product and a measure are all this milkman needs to serve his train. The quart measure has been hard served. The lady customer wears an interesting look-on-the-lookout for short measure.

Lawville, N. Y., U. S. A.
This cheese plant growing at 6541 lbs. It took 47,000 lbs. of milk to make it. They do things on a big scale in the U. S. A. You may be sure that it is good to eat too, because scientific methods, up-to-date housing facilities and complete sanitary measures all enter into the production of milk in America's greatest dairy State.

Seattle, Washington, U. S. A.
Siegis Pletzer's Prospect, a Real Champion
Her home is the Champion Milk Farm, Seattle, Washington. N. A. Brown, Manager, says: "We furnish sterilized milk especially for babies. It is necessary to keep our cows in the very best of condition." Clipping increases production capacity and decreases bacteria count. Siegig Pletzer's Prospect is one of a herd of 175 milk cows.

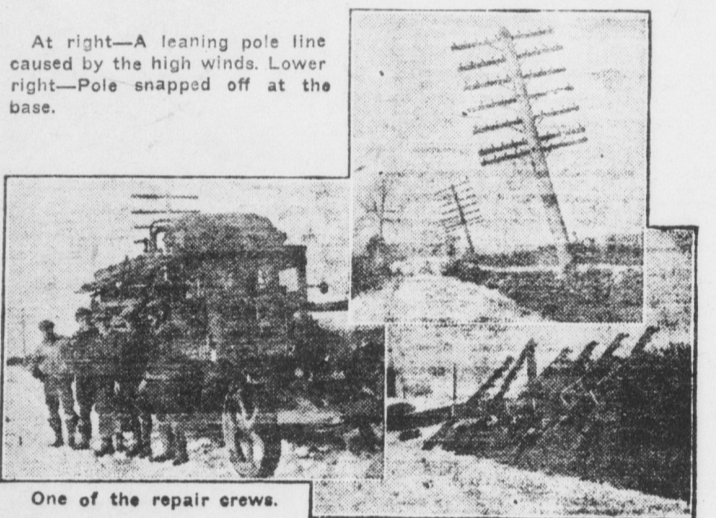

New Zealand
Early in the Morning the Milkman Arrives
Williamson, N. Z., milk society is all under the control of the City which permits no milk to be sold except that which has been inspected and certified by the Health Officer. The City buys the milk from the farmers and allows producers to sell it at a fixed price—No producing here.

Antwerp, Belgium
The Lady Milkman Makes Her Daily Trip in Her Dog Cart
In Belgium, you know, as well as in Holland, it is a very common thing to see a team of dogs harnessed to a milk wagon, but usually the driver of the team gives their horses a helping hand. This help must have been tired or else would surely have helped out her little team.

SNOW AND SLEET STORM ENVELOPING EAST, INJURES TELEPHONE EQUIPMENT

At right—A leaning pole line caused by the high winds. Lower right—Pole snapped off at the base.

The last storm that swept over the East recently, covering 1 in a blanket of snow and sleet, did considerable damage to the telephone plant of the Bell Telephone Company. Delaware bore the brunt of the winds and the icy storm. The center for this section was around Middletown, Delaware, about 25 miles south of Wilmington, and the telephone people were kept on the job day and night repairing the damage done by the elements. Where the wreckage had been estimated it was found that over a period of two days 100 poles had been snapped off or uprooted from their moorings by the violence of the storm. One hundred and thirty miles of wire, weighted down with ice and sleet, had fallen and lay twisted and knotted along the highways. Sixty long distance telephone lines and 600 telephones were temporarily put out of service. All this havoc occurred within a 25-mile radius of Middletown. Telephone repairmen swarmed into the affected area and while the storm was still raging the repair work was begun. Two emergency circuits were "cut through" from Wilmington to Dover. Breaks on the shorter lines in Dover, Middletown and Smyrna were traced and repaired and within a comparatively short time after the storm had passed on, communication between the main centers of this district had been established. With the main avenues of communication open, work was begun on the shorter lines and it was not until all subscribers' lines were working that the difficult job of replacing the torn and twisted wires and cables that lay along the highways was begun. New poles were placed when necessary and poles that had been loosened or displaced were once more erected.

The Literary Spotlight

BY MARION ELLET
HERE is no form of English literature quite so satisfying to a thoroughly human person as the story of a naughty boy. Sometimes the boy is grown and sometimes he isn't. In the case of "The Harmonious Child", a short story written by Sir Philip Gibbs and appearing in the April number of Hearst's International and Cosmopolitan, the boy is just fourteen, and a "child prodigy." Poor little Val Sheridan had submitted to the dictates of a clever press agent, had hugged a Teddy-bear, and had worn sailor suits and long curls. Under the sailor suit however, there was a real boy and one fine day the boy asserted himself in a healthy tantrum, seasoned with artistic temperament. Threats of cutting off his curls and "kicking the violin to pieces" were answered with arguments about the value of publicity and, finally, with a locked door. The locked door proved only a good, and then followed the adventure. Val, shorn of his curls, went gyping with a red-headed lady two years his junior, while publicity agent, music master, and a waiting concert audience continued to wait. It is a real boy story.

A Warning to Men Who Do Not Dance With Wife
IN its blending of whimsicality, satire and pathos, "The Owl on the Fountain", appearing in the March issue of Hearst's Bazar, represents Michael Arlen at his best. Arlen writes of an English peer and newspaper magnate who murdered his fair lady because she danced with his private secretary. The private secretary, in his turn, fell at the crucial moment, leaving the lady to the base accusations and threats of the husband.
