(From Page One) Same ordered repaired. The pillars in front of the Bachman hotel on East Main street, was reported in bad shape. The property committee was ordered to have the owner of the building, Mr. Ed. Ream, repair same immediately.

Light Committee Mr. Miller stated all lights in good condition and the installation of a new light on Donegal Springs road and West Donegal street.

Board of Health Mr. M. M. Leib, Secretary, reported no quarantines during August and September and only three since July 1, one of which did not originate here. Council was commended for the manner in which it kept the garbage cleaned up during the hot weather. The health of the town is in a very satisfactory condition. Friendship Fire Company No. 1 asked for an appropriation of $100 which was given them.

Engle Stone Business Council ordered Mr. Ezra Engle be instructed to present his bill for stone delivered to the boro during the month of September. Council, after giving it much consideration, decided charges for 1924 and 1925 have been approximately 10 per cent in excess for stone actually delivered.

Mr. Engle furnished stone, during 1924, amounting to $824.10, during 1925 stone, amounting to $1,826.36, totaling $2,650.46. Council will deduct 10 per cent from this total which amounts to $205.05. Mr. Engle's September bill for stone is $345.21. After deducting the above amount from the September bill, Mr. Engle will receive a check for balance which is $80.16. All bills were then paid and council adjourned.

Sea Lions On the Pacific coast there are two species of sea lions, the California sea lion, ranging along the coast of that state, and the Stellar sea lion, ranging from the California coast north into Alaska, says Nature Magazine. The largest of the old bulls will measure about ten feet and the estimated weight is about 1200 or 1500 pounds. The cows weigh 400 to 600 pounds. The Bulletin is always prompt in the delivery of all printing.

WORTHLESS LAWN SEED BEING SOLD IN PENNA.

Persons buying lawn seed as well as local dealers are warned by the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture to buy their seed from reliable firms. This warning is prompted by the recent discovery of worthless lawn seed being offered for sale within the State. A sample taken from a supply of seed coming from a seed house in an adjoining state and being sold by a grocer in Harrisburg, was analyzed and found to be over 80 per cent chaff and only 19 per cent pure grass seed. When advised of the analysis, the grocer immediately discontinued selling the seed.

The package in which the seed was being sold was marked 25 cents and weighed slightly less than one-half pound. At that rate the good seed in the package was costing approximately $2.50 per pound. Even the poor seed in the package was of inferior quality and would probably give a very low percentage of germination, according to Dr. E. M. Gress, who is in charge of the seed analysis work.

Persons who buy grass seed in packages of less than eight ounces such as the above must be always on guard because the State Seed Law does not afford protection in this case. Likewise local dealers who are handling grass seed should be extremely cautious and demand that the seed companies who supply their lawn seed furnish official certification as to the quality of the product.

No firm having any regard for its own reputation can afford to sell poor seed. It is always best to play safe by having analyzes made by the Department of Agriculture and whenever a low quality of seed is found, have it eliminated from trade channels.

Natural Soap Factories Most of the raw material procured from the interior of the earth must go through various processes before it can be utilized, though much is delivered ready for use. Coal and salt are familiar examples and in some localities ready-made soap is found. One natural "plant" is at Ashcraft, British Columbia, another in Nevada, and a third at Oken's Lake, Cal., soap from which places has been used in quantities for many years.

Her Rebellious Parents

By H. IRVING KING

THE business of Amos Bullard had prospered exceedingly of late. So he built a country house and employed architects and decorators at fancy prices. A young man named Mowray, an interior decorator, had come down to Mount Pleasant, the name of the new mansion and its attached estate, to practice his artistic skill upon the spacious rooms of the great house.

Now among other enterprises which Amos had on hand was the selecting of a husband for his daughter Margaret. In this enterprise he was assisted by his wife with great ability. In fact, Mrs. Amos took the lead in this particular speculation. Margaret was their only child. She must marry not only a fortune, but a fortune attached to a young man of a social station higher than the one hitherto occupied by the Bullards.

Margaret was of an artistic turn of mind and was always longing about watching the decorators at work. A harmless eccentricity, thought Mrs. Amos, and then, to be interested in art was really, rather good form. The first that Mrs. Bullard suspected that something was wrong was when Tom Mowray began to exhibit a great and growing profusion of daisies in his decorations. One of Mrs. Bullard's friends calling, and being shown the work in progress one day, remarked: "What lot of marguerites your decorator uses."

"What, the daisies?" asked Mrs. Amos, whose early education had been neglected. "Yes—marguerites, we call them." "Marguerites, Margaret," mused Mrs. Amos, who was a mighty shrewd person; "and Margaret always hung about watching that young man work."

"That night she said to her husband: 'Amos, I suspect something.' And she told him what and why. 'Nonsense,' said Amos. 'Marie is too sensible a girl to fall in love with a mere decorator. However, I'll bun- die him out of the house tomorrow. The impudent scoundrel.' " "Let us call in Margie," said Mrs. Amos, "and find out right now how far this thing has gone."

Margaret was called in. She acknowledged at once that she was in love with Tom Mowray and was going to marry him, if he should ever ask her, and she rather thought would. Margie was surprised. Heretofore her will had been law to her father and mother. What did they mean by this unkind conduct?

But the rebellious parents carried the day. Tom was discharged the next morning and Margaret packed off to visit a great-aunt in Oswego. Amos was recounting to one of his business associates this little family incident. "Tom Mowray!" cried Slater, the business associate aforesaid. "Why, so you sure he is not a son of Old Tom Mowray? Old Tom had a son who went in for art, and his name was the same as his father's."

Amos assented. Had he, after all, made the great mistake of his life? Old Tom Mowray was that red-tape capitalist, that possessor of great wealth, known all over the world. To see Margie the wife of a son of Old Tom would indeed be the crowning of a successful life for Amos. Amos was a man of action. Action, and prompt action, accounted for his present wealth. He took a West Shore train and went to the Hubster to where the feudal castle in which Old Tom Mowray had settled down towered above the woods and the swift-running river.

Old Tom received him coldly, merely bowed and waited for his visitor to speak, glancing from time to time at the card which Amos had sent in. Amos was a little disconcerted; but business was business. "I have come, sir," said Amos, "to speak with you upon a matter which, I apprehend, concerns both our families." Tom motioned for Amos to take a chair. They both sat down. Amos told Old Tom of the young decorator, of his daughter and of their having fallen in love with each other. "Now, sir," went on Amos, "I believe that this young man is your son and namesake. I have been so informed. While undoubtedly your son and my daughter are very much in love with each other, I was loath to have the matter go on any further without consulting you."

Old Tom had watched Amos closely, as he told his tale. When it was ended the great capitalist said slowly: "Mr. Bullard, you have been misinformed. I have only one son. He is much given to dabbling in art. It is true. But his name is John and he is at present in Italy. Also he has been married two years." The mingled emotion which surged and tumbled together in the breast of Amos caused his face to assume such a peculiar expression that Old Tom—for once in his life—really laughed. Then he said: "The young man you refer to is my nephew. His fortune will be sufficient and he will make a very suitable husband for your daughter. In fact, as the young people tied to me and asked my advice, I have taken the liberty to have them joined in holy wedlock. Tom!" The door opened and in came young Tom and Margie—both blushing, but happy. Amos gave them his blessing—got busy with the long-distance and had Mrs. Amos telephone hers. The rebellious parents had surrendered, but as young Tom had a couple of million coming to him, and was a nephew of Old Tom, they were glorious in their defeat.

HOW DO YOU STAND? A wooden Indian is made without heels on his moccasins. The live Indian was never known to build a heel on his foot covering. Your heel is narrower than the ball of your foot. Nature made it that way so that it would sink more deeply into the soft earth. Thus the heel of your foot was actually lower than the ball, when you were barefoot.

Referring again to the wooden Indian, if you put a piece of wood, only one-fourth inch thick under his heels, you throw the top of his head out of plumb, or the strain up and down position; just an inch and a half. That is because the wooden Indian does not have a spine that is capable of bending. If you put one-fourth inch under the heel of a live Indian, under your own heels, the effect is the same unless the spine adapts itself to the abnormal heel elevation. In this case, there is just a slight giving away of the normal posture; the head, forward just a little bit, the shoulders or back of the neck, back just a little, the abdomen protrudes and the hips, backward. Even the knees do not remain normal, but sag forward just a shade. All of this to compensate for one-fourth inch under the heel.

Now put a two inch French heel on your foot covering and after it has been worn steadily for years or two, compare the body's posture with the normal. The viscera has all dropped downward and stands outward in the lower part of the abdomen in a very unlovely manner. The head is habitually dropped forward, the shoulders backward at the spine. The abdomen protrudes and the hips or buttock is backward from the normal line. A few years ago, this position was named "the shink-shink slouch," and it describes it fairly well.

Some shoe manufacturers have recognized this trouble and have made shoes which conform with the styles demanded and still give the body a chance to maintain a correct standing position. This is done by lowering the heel on the inside of the shoe and at the same time building up a cushion under the ball of the foot. I have worn such shoes for a long time and have never worn high heels, those made to give the normal posture, give a splendid feeling of relief and vigor, which is similar to the barefoot feeling.

In order to find out how the various members of your family stand, secure a cord 6 feet long, attach a plummet or any weight to one end and attach the other end to some object 6 feet high. Stand in a position that will bring the center of the top of the head in line with the top of the cord. The lower end should touch the floor just in front of your heel. In Volume 1 of the Home Health Club Books, the correct and incorrect positions are illustrated in excellent outline drawings. All readers of this publication are at liberty to write for information upon any subject pertaining to health. Address all such communications to Dr. David H. Reed, Home Health Club, LaPorte, Indiana, giving full name and address and 6 cents in postage.

A Musical Bar The word bar when applied to music between two vertical lines of the score, is not correct. The bar simply divides the music into portions of equal duration. Such portions are really measures of music, or as it was called in ancient times, "musica mensuralis" to distinguish it from the old "musica choralis," in which all the notes were of the same length.
