Considerable loss is suffered each year by the farm population of the country through fires. A report issued recently by the Amer-ican Farm Bureau Federation es-timates that the annual damage is equivalent to the loss that would equivalent to the loss that would be ortailed in the destruction of a city the size of Kansas City. And in this connection the question prices comin est how arises again as to how to cope most effectively with the situation and reduce the hazards.

Fire prevention is what counts in Fire prevention is what counts in farming areas where there is no apparatus and no organized force wi++ which to fight a blaze. Realiz-ing this, national Farm Bureau officials will conduct a campaign urging people living in rural sec tions to guard carefully against flames. Definite action along that line likely will be taken at the convention of farm officials to be held next month in Chicago. Incendiarism, lightning, spontan-

Incendiarism, lightning, spontan-eous combustion, and carelessness eous combustion, and carelessness and lack of precautionary measures about the farm buildings are the chief causes of rural fires. The first three can not be coped with to any conneciable degree, but it is with the lack of care and pre-caution that the proposed campaign will deal. Formers will be urged to safeguard their property by in-stalling only approved power plants and other devices in their building: and to exert every effort in probullet cartridges. I. S.
