Origin of Phrase Lost
The phrase used to describe Turkey "the sick man of Europe," probably had a journalistic origin, now lost. Montesquieu (1689-1755) in one of his "Persian Letters," speaks of the Ottoman empire, "whose sick body was not supported by a mild and regular diet but by powerful treatment, which continually exhausted it." The expression is also sometimes credited to Czar Nicholas I of Russia, in a conversation concerning Turkey held with a British diplomat in 1853: "We have on our hands a sick man, a very sick man."

Statesman a Stickler for Legible Writing
Philip Guedalla tells us, in connection with a letter addressed by Palmerston to Lord Lansdowne, which is reproduced in his biography, that the viscount was a great stickler for good handwriting, an article in the Kansas City Times recalls:
He early cautioned the young men of the foreign office against the twin iniquities of ill-formed letters and pale ink. But letters still continued to slope backward "like the raking masts of an American schooner," or stood in horrid rows, "which can only be compared to iron railings leaning out of the perpendicular."
His eye flowed exquisitely in that faultless hand, which lived on in Mr. Gladstone's memory as one of the two perfect things that he had known, entitled Palmerston to be a trifle captious on points of calligraphy, to return a dispatch to a distant consul for transcription in blacker ink, and even to issue acidly precise instructions that some reluctant pupil "should form his letters by connecting his slanting down strokes by visible lines at top or bottom according to the letters which he intends his parallel

FIVE TIMES AS MANY CARLOADS OF FRUIT, AND VEGETABLES INSPECTED

Federal-State inspections of fruit and vegetables at Pennsylvania shipping points increased nearly 400 per cent during the past season over the previous season, states a report of the Pennsylvania Bureau of Markets. During the last 5 months of 1926 and the first three months of 1927 there were 1668 carloads of apples, peaches and potatoes certified in accordance with the U. S. grades by licensed inspectors working at 66 loading points in the state. During the previous season 331 cars were certified by inspectors working at 12 loading stations.

This work which is under the supervision of the Federal and State Departments of Agriculture cooperatively, started in Pennsylvania in 1923, when 274 cars were inspected. Since that time the growth of the work has been steady, except during the 1924 season, when the apple and peach yields were greatly curtailed by frost damage.

The inspection of apples has been the heaviest in the state, with a total of 1083 cars inspected during the 1926 season. This is 28 per cent of the 1926 peach shipments. The work with potatoes has started more slowly since only 5 per cent of the 1926 crop potato shipments were inspected, amounting to 150 cars.

"It is impossible to estimate the actual monetary value of the services to shippers in the state but judging from reports received and from the great increase in the number availing themselves of the

Picture's Valuation

The picture by Whistler called "Old Battersea Bridge" is alluded to as the "Nocturne in Blue and Gold." It was the source of one of the artist's most famous witticisms. The opposing counsel in the suit for libel which Whistler brought against Ruskin in 1878 elicited the fact that the picture had been painted in two days, and then asked: "The labor of two days; then is that for which you ask 200 guineas?" To which Whistler retorted with dignity: "No; I ask it for the knowledge of a lifetime." This picture sold two years later for 2,000 guineas.

Train Faster Than Birds

Tests of bird speed in calm air, made by a German investigator, show that the flyers have a wide range of rapidity and few equal the rate of a moderately fast train. Of those observed, the starling had the greatest speed, slightly more than 46 miles an hour. Jackdaws made 38.22 miles an hour, the parrot finch 37 miles, rooks 32.58 miles, and hooded crows and gray gulls 31.05 miles. The sparrow hawk had the slowest speed of all the birds whose flights were measured, making only 25.70 miles an hour.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

CHARLES A. JANKE

Charles A. Janke, Traveling Auditor for the Philadelphia revenue accounting center of The Bell Telephone Company of Pennsylvania recently completed his golden anniversary in the employ of the Telephone Company. Fifty years ago he started his work with the Bell System as a messenger in Camden, New Jersey. Later he became Manager for the Telephone Company in Camden.

Most of his service was spent in the Commercial Department but on March 1, 1910 he was appointed traveling Auditor in the accounting department, which office he still holds.

Grandeur and Decay in Palaces of India

The abodes of Indian potentates are an intricate mixture of the magnificent and the cheap, the grandiose and the ludicrously homely. Cows bark on the front steps, the anteroom is littered with the droppings of pigeons; beggars doze under the gates or search one another's heads for lice; in one of the inner courts fifty courtizans from the city are singing interminable songs in honor of the birth of the maharaja's eleventh grandchild; in the throne room, nobody quite knows why, there stands a brass bedstead with a shah mahogany wardrobe from the Tottenham Court road beside it; framed call or prints from the Christmas number of the Graphic of 1907 alternate along the walls with the most exquisite Rajput and Persian miniatures; in the unswept jewel room 55,000,000 worth of precious stones lie indiscriminately heaped; the paintings are peeling off the walls of the private apartments, a leprosy has attacked the stucco, there is a hole in the carpet; the marble hall of audience is furnished with bamboo chairs and the Bolis-Boyces are driven by ragged chauffeurs.—Aldous Huxley, in the Bookman.

Real Toy Town

The real toy town of Britain is London. Wooden toys such as rocking-horses and doll-houses come in thousands from factories in south London. In the old days wooden toys were mostly made by home workers, each of whom devoted his or her time to the production of one particular article. But the pay was poor, and the increasing competition from Germany practically killed this sort of work.
