Watch for Chick Disease Coccidiosis is caused by a microscopic parasite which develops in the intestinal tract and injures the cells of the intestinal walls. The infection is most common among the flocks of chicks which are allowed to run on ground where chicks were raised the previous year. Cleaning the brooder house every three days, or as often as once a day, is advisable in order to get rid of the droppings, which carry the infection.

Thin the Apple Crop It is not too late to thin the over loaded trees of winter apples. Of the Big-House Family

By CLARISSA MACKIE (Copyright.)

WHEN the Allenbys lost all their money and were obliged to leave the Big House, as it was locally called, they were able to occupy a small cottage not far away. When they were comfortably settled there, Ann and her mother—the father had died before his ill-judged investments had proved to be utterly worthless—were cozy and comfortable enough, though they missed the largeness and space that they had always been accustomed to. The cottage garden was a thing of wonder, for dozens of roots were brought from Big House, and their old gardener, Jacob, had made them a wonderful vegetable garden that was surrounded with more flowers!

"Mother, darling, I know we lack the luxury and the motors of Big House," said Ann, one lovely June day, "but aren't you a little bit happy?" Mrs. Allenby smiled contentedly at her charming daughter. "I am happier, dear, than I have been since I was first married," she admitted. "Your father and I began our married life in this wee house."

"Mother! And you never told me!" exclaimed Ann. "I wanted you to teach yourself to like the change, without favoring prejudice. You know, of course," said Mrs. Allenby, "that Big House has been sold—a small family, I hear mother and son, they say. He's an electrical engineer. When they are thoroughly settled, I shall, of course, call."

Half an hour later, the gate opened and a young man appeared carrying a shining milk pail. Ann liked him at once, because he was big and so clean and thoroughly good looking.

"I came to beg a pail of your spring water, Mrs. Allenby," he said. "We have just arrived at Big House and something has happened to the spring water pump there—at least it is out of commission."

"Why, of course," said hospitable Mrs. Allenby. "My daughter will direct you." "My daughter will direct you," and she resumed her novel, while Ann with a little nod of assent put aside her sewing and joined him on the red brick path.

"Big House is a fine old mansion," observed the young man as they walked along. "But I do miss a few things—such as this old brick path for instance."

"I love them, too," said Ann. "I believe mother forgot to introduce us. I am Ann Allenby."

"And I am Ronald Smith," he laughed. "One of the great Smith clan!" They laughed together as they reached the spring house.

"Then, you are a member of Big House family," offered Ann. He nodded carelessly. "There is only mother and I—the rest of the family have all married and gone off—even father has taken a trip to South America!"

Ann made some happy response, and went back to the veranda. She went on sewing daintily. Then Mrs. Allenby said abruptly: "A rather nice looking man—I suppose he is the butler or chauffeur."

Ann gasped, and then a dimple came into her cheek, what a funny joke on mother! she thought. "Have you ever seen any of the Smiths, mother—of course, I mean the new family next door?"

"No," said Mrs. Allenby, resuming her book. Every day Ronald Smith appeared with his pail for water. One morning he brought a great armful of yellow roses, that had been Mrs. Allenby's only joy at Big House. "Mother sent these to Mrs. Allenby," he said simply, and went on around by the brick walk.

"Mother!" exclaimed Mrs. Allenby. "Never let him know that I thought him the butler!" "Or the chauffeur!" laughed Ann and then she told her mother what she had learned that first day.

"Then, he must be the electrical engineer," decided Mrs. Allenby. "I wonder," she mused, "why he did not repair his pump after that first day?" "I wonder!" echoed Ann, but there was a pink flush in her cheeks, and a tender look in her eyes, for her meetings with young Smith, though brief and unbecomingly interested. Mrs. Allenby put aside her plan of summer idleness, and sending for the village tailor as she paid a state call upon Mrs. Smith, who turned out to be so delightful a woman of her own social rank, with so many congenial acquaintances who were also friends of Mrs. Allenby's, that a very warm friendship grew rapidly between them.

"Ronnie is just spending the summer with me," explained Mrs. Smith on July 24th. The two ladies exchanged a smile or Ronald Smith and Ann had fallen respectively in love with each other and it was not long before they became engaged.

Then Ronald announced his desire to live with Mrs. Allenby at White Cottage. "Of course, you can have a housemaid—and more, if you wish," he told Ann and her mother one day but for my part, I can be both butler and chauffeur, if necessary!"

Roman Household Gods The household gods of the Romans in the time of Augustus were generally known as the Lares and Penates.

Control Grain Moth With harvest time near at hand farmers are again reminded by the entomologists of the Pennsylvania State College that early threshing must be practiced to protect the wheat crop from the Angoumois grain moth. Fumigation with carbon bisulphide in the bins should follow the threshing operation.

Nickel Pinchers Not Exponents of Thrift

I have never known a stingy person who was nice, who was one of those persons the thought of whom makes your heart expand with warmth and affection. I am not inveighing against those who are sensibly economical and thrifty. When a man or woman says: "No, I can't afford that. It's only a dollar, but a dollar is important to me," that is all right. The quality of being unashamed transgressors almost anything into something all right, even charming.

But a stingy person tries to pretend that the expense is nothing; that isn't what interests him. Oh, no! Yet his worry over the slipping away of nickels is so intense in him that it makes your flesh creep. When there is a restaurant check to be paid, when you invite a tightwad to have a soda with you, click, click, you intuitively feel the celebrations going on in his anxious brain as to which of you will have to give up the mazzama for the indulgence.

"I don't want to embarrass them by taking them to the Ritz," the very rich girl rationalizes her economy, "so I'll just take them down to that interesting little place under the elevated, with the savdiest on the floor."

"I don't want persons to get to care for me only for my money," says the very rich snob, who as often as not is the richest debutante of the season. So she always makes it a point to "go Dutch."—Elizabeth Barbour in the Saturday Evening Post.

Normal Span of Life May Yet Be Century

One of the greatest advantages of the modern civilization is the way in which the span of human life has been increased, points out Brenda Ueland in an article in Liberty.

"The span of useful life used to be only forty-five years," the writer explains. "Now people are living until seventy in full usefulness and vigor—eighty or ninety or a hundred. And the result is that the center point of humanity has shifted from the twenties to the thirties."

"At the court of Louis XV," the writer continues, "a man's prime was twenty-five. After that—the downward slope. Today a man of twenty-five is one whose father is wondering whether to send him to a law or a medical school, or set him at work. Formerly a woman of twenty-two was an old maid; a woman of thirty-five often was a grandmother."

The Exact Witness

A barrister was cross-examining a rather innocent-looking countryman. "So you had a pistol?" the barrister asked. "I had, sir."

"Whom did you intend to shoot with it?" "I wasn't intending to shoot anyone."

"Then was it for nothing that you got it?" "No, it wasn't." "Come, come, sir! By virtue of your solemn oath, what did you get the pistol for?"

"By virtue of my solemn oath," said the countryman, "I got it for ten-and-sixpence."—Weekly Scotsman.

Too Observant

Frequently in restaurants and other places where a certain rule is continually being ignored, we are reminded of an incident related by a friend of ours. While waiting in Spain he lunched at the monastery of the Benedictines.

"After lunch he took out his cigar case and began to smoke. The white-robed monk attendant, 'Yes, sir, we do,' was the prompt reply. 'There's a law against smoking in the refectory.' 'Then where,' said our friend, 'do all the cigar and cigarette stubs come from that I see about me?' 'From men who didn't ask about the law,' the monk replied, mildly.—Boston Transcript.

Worked by the Tides

A water-mill that is nine miles inland, yet obtains all its power from the tides, is claimed to be the only one of its kind by the inhabitants of Woodbridge, Suffolk, formerly one of England's great shipbuilding centers. Just how long this wheel has been answering to the rhythm of the tides no one is certain, but about 740 years ago a mill, standing on the same spot, was leased for a yearly rental of a pound of cummin, valued in those days at about twopenny. When the tides of the River Deben are at their highest and lowest the mill rests, but at any other time the great wheel is turning.

Heroic Swiss Guards

Swiss Guards were a body enrolled in the seventeenth century for the special protection of the person of the French king. Left without direction when Louis XVI placed himself in the hands of the national assembly, they defended the Tuilleries against the revolutionists for some time, but in the end were butchered as they were fired in obedience to the king's order based on a treacherous promise by the leaders of the mob.

Too Bad

Flora—I don't believe that scandal about Mrs. Gayleigh. Fanny—Then why did you tell me about it? Flora—I was in hope that you could confirm it.

Cook With Electricity Westinghouse Ranges. You Should Have a Westinghouse Electric Range. Because accurate heat control gives you absolutely uniform results. You can always duplicate your best culinary efforts. Cooking with electricity is easier; there is not the necessity for constant attention and regulation. An electric range is clean; there is no dirt or smoke. It is healthy; there are no obnoxious fumes. It is safe; there is no need for loose matches in the kitchen. Your kitchen is cooler with an electric range because the heat does not penetrate the oven walls. There is less shrinkage of meats and other food in an electric range; you will save in the amount of food used for your family. The meals you prepare on an electric range will be more appetizing and more nutritive because all the savory juices are retained by the heat storage principle. See them on display at H. S. Newcomer & Son Mount Joy, Penna.
