Adelaide's Teashop Became Famous
 By AD SCHUSTER

(Copyright.)

POSSIBLY this story dates back to Adelaide's great-grandfather who sailed the seas when the waves tossed high and a mariner took heavy chances against a safe return. Had she been a man she would have sought adventure. Adelaide told herself, and, being a woman, she did the next best thing and read brave tales out of books. There came a time when she was left alone with a small sum of money and the necessity of providing for the future. She thought of all of the possibilities and then decided upon a tea room and restaurant.

This was to be no ordinary tea room. Adelaide was determined to make it unlike any in the world. She would go to the coast, to some small port on the Atlantic where fishing fleets have come and gone for many years and there set up in a splendid shack a retreat and meeting place for adventurers.

Adelaide thought of hale men from the seven seas, men wearing ear-rings and stroking ferocious mustaches. She pictured booted men with red scarfs at their necks and wild yarns on their lips and their delight when they spied in her a kindred spirit. So she set up her shop and with a sign "Adventurers All" invited the roving spirits of romance, the roaring, roiling terrors of the sea, to have a cup of tea.

The old town of Boulder Cove rubbed its eyes in amazement at the enterprise and assumption of this young woman. Was it possible she thought she could make tea better than the good wives or that the husbands and sons were not getting enough to eat at home? Those who visited the place for curiosity left wondering at the idea anyone could find adventure in tea and cake and felt sorry for a girl who had taken her fortunes in so dubious a venture. Despairing of winning over the home trade or of seeing a real adventurer come into port, Adelaide discovered that if she were to keep the shop open she must attract a goodly proportion of the tourists who motored through the town. Most of them stopped, talked to the old-timers, took photographs and moved on.

These old-timers, particularly Tom Crown, were of the kind she had pictured foregathered in her place. Adelaide, in love with the town, totaled her books and decided she had not long to remain.

"Tom," she said to Rodney Meek Boulder Cove's merchant and postmaster, "are the only steady customer of the place. If I don't get more 'perhaps' things will pick up. It takes the folks here a long time to get accustomed to anything new. It would be too bad to have you go."

The very next day Tom Crown rolled into the inn, took a place at a table near a window and in his booming voice started a rum of the sea. Adelaide smiled for this was as she had dreamed.

"Yes sir," said Tom to Rodney, "that squall came up so sudden it blew the sails to ribbons afore we could haul them down. We was as helpless as an eggshell in Niagara and there came a big wave."

Adelaide could not catch the rest for she had to welcome a party of tourists who sat at a table adjoining the old sailor and gave him all their attention. He went on with his story of the bark Nancy Imogene which was lifted on a big wave and deposited in the very center of an island and as he talked he pounded the table. The tale was impressive and no one dared dispute. Here, at least, was one successful noon hour. Maybe Rodney was right and business would pick up.

After that Tom Crown came back many times and with him a train of tourists. Always he had a tale of a kind that sent the visitors away talking of the picturesque old man who held forth in the inn of "Adventurers All." Then some one wrote a story about him for the city papers and Adelaide's teashop became famous.

"You told me, Rodney, that things would change. I wonder how you knew?"

"They just had to change," he answered, "because, you know, it would not be right for you to go away. We want you here, Adelaide, the town goes and, and I do, too."

He read the answer in her eyes and afterward when he met Tom Crown on the street told him the news.

BAUM FAMILY HOLDS SECOND ANNUAL REUNION

One hundred and thirty persons attended the second annual reunion of the William and John Baum clan, which was held on Saturday in a grove on the William Saylor farm two miles north of Manheim.

Jacob K. Snavely, aged 77 years, of Elizabethtown, was the oldest person who attended the reunion, and Robert Keath Durborow, aged six weeks, of Elizabethtown, the youngest. William Baum, of Auburn, Ill., traveled the longest distance, to be present at the gathering. Lucille and Francis Tobias, of Collingswood, N. J., were also present.

An address on "Family Reunion" was delivered by Rev. Haessler, of Columbia. Following a program of readings and music, a number of prizes were awarded for games and refreshments were served.

R. S. Mason, Elizabethtown, was elected president of the reunion. Other officers are: Vice president, Mrs. S. R. Mason; secretary and treasurer, Mrs. Annie Saylor.

The next reunion of the family will be held in Kauffman Park, at Manheim, next year.

First Silver Tokens in America's Coinage

Old records show that silver tokens for making change were first used in this country in Annapolis. With the consent of the government, I. Chalmers, an Annapolis gold and silver smith, in 1783 turned out by hand sixpence, threepence and shilling coins, to combat sharpers who, after depreciation of paper money, began to cut five "quarters" out of silver Spanish dollars.

Because of lack of change the cutting of Spanish dollar into halves and fourths was condoned, and even necessary, until it was discovered that expert cutters were resaping a small fortune. When expertly cut the fifth could be discerned from quarters only by keen eyesight or by weighing. Chalmers produced new standard coins and took the short pieces in exchange until the fraud was stopped.

Odd Legends About Inhabitants of Moon

The weird marks seen on a full moon, and today known to be mountains and valleys on the face of the Queen of Night, have given rise to many quaint legends peculiar to different countries. In certain races the man in the moon is a being who, on account of great wisdom, says a writer in the Popular Pictorial, was transferred to the moon from which he was able to see everything that occurred. To the Chinese he is Yue-tao who arranges all marriages. Among the old-faded Indian tribes the medicine men received their power by departing into the middle of a lake and holding consultation with the ngn in the moon.

The German version deals with a peasant who was reprimanded by an angel for gathering fagots on a Sunday. He replied, "Sunday on earth, or Monday in heaven it is all the same to me." For this he was sent to an eternal moonday in heaven.

The earliest English version appears in the writings of a St. Albans monk. Here it was Moses who found a man gathering sticks on the Sabbath, and expelled him to the moon. In France the man in the moon be comes Judas Iscariot, and the wood is a load which he must always carry as a punishment.

Captive Wild Beasts Have Strong Appeal

Long before Christ the desire of the public to view wild animals, birds, reptiles and fish at close range manifested itself. Royal preserves and menageries are as old as the civilization of Assyria and Egypt. In 1100 B. C. it is recorded that the first emperor of the Chou dynasty in China established a zoological garden, the first of its kind of which there is definite knowledge. This garden was called intelligence park and appears to have had scientific and educational objects. The ancient Romans kept in captivity large numbers of such animals as leopards, lions, bears, elephants, camels, rhinoceroses and hippopotamuses as well as ostriches and crocodiles. Emperor Frederick II had at his Sicilian court a notable collection from which he sent to Henry III of England three leopards. In compliment to the three animals of that species that appeared in the monarch's coat of arms. These animals, with an elephant sent not long afterward by Louis IX of France, formed the nucleus of the famous Tower menagerie.—Detroit News.

Doubles—and Quits

They were sitting out a dance. Great palm fronds hid them from view. The saxophone wailed and moaned and in the dim light the girl's head rested on her partner's shoulder. Suddenly the girl spoke: "How much do you love me?" she asked. "As much," murmured the young man, "as much, darling, as you love me." The girl looked up and drew away quickly. "Humph!" she said.

Cultivate Good Mind

Worry produces indigestion and dyspepsia; the gastric juices are not formed. Hate thoroughly, and you will be a martyr to neuralgia. Be violently jealous, and the upset to the glands sows the seeds of cancer. Be malicious and cruel, and you'll get neuralgia. Be a fault-finder, a nagger, a scold and asthma comes. It is impossible to disconnect the mind and the body. An ill thought doesn't stay in the mind; it hits the body some where. It has been noted that extreme disgust will produce catarrh. It is not always possible to ward off external causes of disease, but we ought to be able to control our minds. Poison in the mind means poison in the body—suffering, and a shortening of life. Have a "good" mind, and you'll have good health.—London Tit-Bits.

American Ideas Abroad

Emigrants returning to their native lands in Europe after having made their "fortunes" in the United States, carry back with them American ideas and the American language, which has supplanted French and German as the international tongue among the European masses. In hundreds of villages in southeastern Europe there are two districts—one the "native," built of stone and rubble, with the chickens roosting in the dining and bedroom; the other the "American," with houses of white plaster and a special brand of the live stock, says a correspondent of the New York Sun.
