Our first stop was at the new university at Baton Rouge, Louisiana. The commercial and agricultrual development of that state long ago out-grew the facilities of the old agricultural college. Governor Parker sponsored a measure that provided a two per cent severance tax on national resources and proposed to build a complete new university. The school serves the people well; it is studying the sugar beet and its possibilities, the manufacture of celotex from sugar cane refuse, and is developing a tick-resistant strain of cattle.
