Progress Denoted by

Evolution of Window

Like most architectural terms which are in themselves records of the times and the persons through which they have passed, the simple word "window" conveys a wealth of significance both to the builder and the historian. Originally window openings were primarily for air (wind), hence the name window. They were also in some cases intended for defense against marauders and were, as civilization progressed in later years, intended for light.

Development through the centuries has fostered the evolution of the window through the periods of a simple opening in which was placed oiled parchment or paper, and the first crude glazed windows to the modern steel casement which frames the out-look from the modern homes of today. As Europe gradually emerged from the medieval ages the growing consciousness of the people, and especially the landed people, began to manifest itself in more comfortable and then more artistic dwellings. The window became a thing of beauty, its different styles finding no higher expression than in the English homes of the Tudor and Elizabethan periods.

Average Man Puts in

Eight Years of Work

The average man is at least sixteen before he starts serious work and even then there are not many of us who do more than eight hours a day. The average man's working life is about thirty years, so the person who works eight hours out of each fourteen for thirty years has done ten years' work in his lifetime.

This is reckoning that he has worked eight hours a day and seven days a week, which, of course, none of us do. We have to remember the Saturday half-holiday and Sunday, which leave only 44 working hours for the week. This means cutting our ten weeks down, by roughly two years, so that a life's work is reduced to only eight years!

Another deduction must be made for illness, so out of those eight years' work another six months must be taken. In point of fact, the actual loss is a fraction under six months, but, in round numbers, there is only seven and a half years of work in the ordinary person's lifetime.

First of Vanderbilts

Builder and Fighter

Commodore Vanderbilt, who built the foundation of the family's wealth upon the bottom boards of the plunger that plied the bay between Staten Island and Whitehall, appears to have been neither a lovable nor a great-hearted man. Arthur D. Howden Smith, in his biography of Vanderbilt, states specifically that he lacked those qualities, and calls him a man "who trampled ruthlessly upon all opposition, who had no spark of chivalry, but a man whose ambition was to build up, not to tear down. According to his own standards, an honorable man. And always a fighter; fighting for steamboats, fighting for railroads, fighting for life."

He won at both the fighting and the building. When his last illness was upon him he called his son, Billy, and said: "Bill, I'm leavin' ye close to $90,000,000."

"Yes, father," answered Billy. "What ye think the others are agoin' to say?" "What can they say, father?" "Wish I knew. There'll only be about $15,000,000 to divide among the lot of 'em."—Detroit News.

Poetic Tribute Paid

by Egyptians to Sun

A tribute to the orb of day from "The Literature of Ancient Egypt," as translated by Aylward M. Blackburn from the German of Adolf Erman: "When it is dawn and thou risest in the horizon and shinest as the sun in the day, thou dispelst the darkness and sheddest thy beams.

"The Two Lands keep festival, awake, and stand on their feet, for thou has raised them up. "They wash their bodies, they take their garments, and their hands praise thine arising. The whole land, it doeth work.

"All beasts are content with their pasture, the trees and herbs are verdant. The birds fly out of their nests and their wings praise thy ka.

"The ships voyage down and up stream likewise, and every way is open, because thou risest. The fishes in the river leap up before thy face. Thy rays are in the sea."

So centuries before Christ, the earth and they that dwell therein felt the urge to be up and doing with the sun. Who spoke of Egyptian darkness?

No "Spooning" in Italy

"Spooning" is a custom unknown to Italians. For Italian love-making is highly decorous and conducted solely with a flow of language which, if understood, would bring joy to the heart of any American flapper. It is literally impossible to translate the American verb "to spoon" into the Italian language without using words which to Italians sound positively indecent. Yet the custom has entered Italy, and the Italians have been obliged to translate the American verb to meet the situation. Near Genoa there is a park in which appears a signboard which says, "Lo spunggiamento severamente proibito," meaning "spooning severely prohibited."

Delightful Gossip

Gossip is what delights us all. In gossip we deal with everything that is personal to ourselves and personal to those with whom we have some authentic acquaintance. We—if the purist will have it so—chatter. But in chattering we are at ease. We are not striving to appear cleverer than we really are, or more learned. We are not venturing out into the fields that we only pretend to know. We are not being "intellectual" or "arty." We are just saying what comes into our heads and to the tips of our ready tongues about everything that we regard as interesting.—Frank Swinerton in New York Herald Tribune.

Tree Toads as Prophets

It is quite commonly believed that the tree toad's loud piping voice is a sign of rain. Like most weather prophets, however, he cannot be depended upon. The skin of the tree toad is very moist and is sensitive to the least increase of moisture in the atmosphere. He feels moisture in the air before most other creatures do and it is his practice to let the world know he is thankful for it. Where he feels people, or rather where people feel themselves, is in respect to the meaning of moisture in the air. It does not necessarily indicate rain, but many believe it does.—Exchange.

Presidential Yacht

In the days of Presidential luxury, which began with the Roosevelt administration, the yacht Mayflower was first applied to the purpose she has since served. President Roosevelt took over the vessel in 1902 by permission of congress. Upon her decks he introduced the Russian and Japanese commissioners who met at Portsmouth, N. H., and made the peace between their countries. Since then she has received the guests of four subsequent Presidents, and has served all of them as a part-time summer White House.

Still Worse

"That, sir, is a falsehood!" severely said the schoolma'am. "Do you know what will happen to you if you tell lies?"

"Yes'm," nonchalantly replied Skinny Simpson. "I'll go to hell and burn."

"Worse than that! You will be expelled from school!"—Kansas City Times.

Prosaic Shepherding

Shepherding is becoming a science in France. A school of shepherding is operating at Rambouillet. The school is a government institution, fostered by the ministry of agriculture. It teaches many things that the shepherds with their crooks, painted by artists and described by poets, never bothered about. There are no picturesque costumes. Students are not judged by their ability to sing or pose. They have to study the work of shepherding with a view to making a profit on sheep. About all the romance left in the profession is the sheep dog.

The man who thought a buggy was good enough

IN THE old days, a solid, conservative citizen might sniff and tell you he didn't read advertising.

He didn't think so much of the horseless carriage, either. The telephone was newfangled, and an insult to the United States mails.

As for radio, aeroplanes, wireless photography—if they had been born then, he probably would have thought them a bit immoral.

But he's changed. He's been educated. His point of view has been made broader and more modern. He has been civilized—by the automobile, the telephone, radio, advertising.

Every single one has opened up new paths for him, taught him new things. Advertising, especially. Advertising tells him the newest things to wear, the best things to eat. Advertising tells his wife how to make a home up to date and attractive. Advertising tells him the prices to pay for things he buys, saves him from the old-fashioned ways of doing business—helps him live well, keeps him modern.

Advertising can help you. The advertisements in this paper are here to tell you many things that make life more comfortable, more interesting, happier. Read them faithfully. They'll keep you abreast of the times. They'll prevent you from becoming the type of old foggy—who-sniff—doesn't read advertising.
